Economy Bloc Sets 6% Budget Cut As Its Goal

Would Preclude New Taxes; Decision on Aid to Finns May Come This Week

By William V. Nessly.
Post Staff Writer

A 6 per cent Congressional reduction in President Roosevelt's budget estimates of $8,424,000,000 last night was held up as the economy goal as both Houses prepared to act this week on big appropriation bills.

Avoidance of the need for Presidentially-suggested $460,000,000 of new taxes was the aim spurring budget-slashers of both parties.

Other main matters up for consideration after Congress today pays honor to the late Senator Borah in a State funeral included:

Revival of the Dies Committee on Un-American Activities, which is expected to be favorably reported by the House Rules Committee.

Decision on what, if any, aid will be voted for Finland in her resistance to Soviet invasion.

Noticeably heartened by increasing evidence of two-chamber willingness to cut appropriations below the White House budget figures, economy leaders were insistent last night that the contemplated cuts could be made without serious harm to the Government functions.

Martin Confident

Representative Martin, House minority leader, said:

"There will be plenty of economy as far as the House is concerned. The President asked for economy, and he is going to get it, and then some. I think we can save enough so that we won't need to have any new taxes. We should be able to save at least $460,000,000 out of an $8,000,000,000 budget. That is only 6 per cent."

Senator Alva B. Adams (Democrat), of Colorado, floor manager for the defense deficiency bill, already cut $20,176,935 to a total of $251,822,588, has insisted the reductions would "not imperil the defense program." He added, "the only way to economize is to ecomonize. We have made a start in the right direction, but we must go even further if we are to put our financial house in order."

The deficiency bill is to be called up in the Senate tomorrow.

Senator Charles L. McNary, of Oregon, Republican leader, said last night he thought the bill might be passed by Wednesday evening, and expressed confidence that the economy sentiment in that chamber was strong enough to sustain the budget cuts proposed.

Stampede Is Possibility

Despite the recognized danger that savings voted may be wiped out if election-conscious members stampede for farm benefit payments not included in the budget, or for increased rivers and harbors "pork" projects, economy leaders remained optimistic.

They have been encouraged by the House's refusal to tack a $20,000,000 postoffice building program onto the independent offices bill.

"There appears to be more of a desire for economy in the Senate today than there has been in years, and it is welcome," Senator Harry F. Byrd (Democrat), of Virginia, veteran opponent of New Deal spending, commented.

The House, having cut the defense deficiency bill from a $271,999,523 budget total to $264,611,252—a figure which has been reduced another $12,788,664 by the Senate Appropriations Committee—and then having slashed $94,517,206 from the independent offices bill to reduce its total to $1,100,187,263, will receive the Treasury-Postoffice bill tomorrow in a form already reduced $10,000,000 or $11,000,000 below

Mary McElroy, Who Saved Kidnaper From Doom, Kills Self

MARY McELROY
"My four kidnapers are probably the only people on earth who don't consider me an utter fool . . ."
By the Associated Press

Kansas City, Jan. 21.—Brunette Mary McElroy killed herself today after seven tragic years of brooding over what she termed the unjust punishment of the men who kidnaped her in 1933.

Police said she had taken her own life. They found a note penned in ink in the handwriting of the slender 32-year-old daughter of the late H. F. McElroy, stormy Pendergast political machine leader, who was ousted as city manager last spring.

The note said:

"My four kidnapers are probably the only people on earth who don't consider me an utter fool.

"You have your death penalty now—so—please—give them a chance."

The note was interpreted as referring to her known attitude of sympathy toward the fate of the four men who abducted her.

U. S., Canada Meet Today On Waterway

Delegates Arrive To Discuss Treaty On St. Lawrence

By Andrue Berding
Associated Press Staff Writer

Secretary of State Hull last night welcomed a Canadian delegation to discuss the St. Lawrence-Great Lakes waterway treaty, declaring it is gratifying to take up a constructive project in the midst of almost world-wide disturbed international relationships.

The Canadian delegation is composed of Dr. O. D. Skelton, Undersecretary of State for External Affairs; J. E. Read, Guy A. Lindsey, T. H. Hogg and Olivier Lefebvre.

Hull, in a statement, said that "in a world in which so much of international relations arise out of unhappiness, it is gratifying to be able to take up a project which is constructive, and whose object is to improve the economic well-being of the peoples of both countries."

U. S. to Return Trip

The Canadian-American conventions that may end in a treaty to develop a Great Lakes-St. Lawrence deep waterway and vast hydro-electric power reserve will open here today.

The Canadian delegation will meet with Adolf A. Berle, jr., Assistant Secretary of State; Leland Olds, chairman of the Federal Power Commission, and John Hickerson, assistant chief of the European division of the State Department.

Early this month the three United States officials went to Ottawa for three days' discussions with Canadian officials.

As the would-be final discussions open—to last three days—

Boy, 6, Playing With Rifle, Kills Washington Girl, 14

Death from a .22-caliber rifle in the hands of a 6-year-old boy came to Doris Jean Bomgardner, 14, of the 3500 block Eleventh street northwest, last night when she went to the home of the boy, William Bartelmes, in the same block, to take her younger sister home for supper.

Jean was admitted to the Bartelmes home by William's grandfather, Fred A. Bartelmes. The boy's parents, Mr. and Mrs. Edgar Bartelmes, were not at home.

When Jean said she had come for her sister, Patricia Anne, 7, Bartelmes told her the children were in the basement. She went downstairs, where William, Patricia, Richard Drew, 6, of the 3500 block of Eleventh street northwest, and Dean Ewart, 6, of the 3600 block, were playing.

William came out of a closet with his father's .22-caliber rifle in his hands, police said in their reconstruction of the tragedy. He pointed it first at 6-year-old Dean, but did not pull the trigger, they said. Then he pointed the rifle at Doris.

"You'd better not shoot that thing," she was quoted as saying.

William pulled the trigger.

The bullet entered her chest. She ran up the stairs and fell dying in the kitchen.

The Rev. Lawrence Wempe, assistant pastor of Sacred Heart Church, was summoned and administered the last sacrament. Dr. Fernando Ribeiro, of Emergency Hospital, pronounced Doris dead.

Liner Burns, Storm Hits 900 in Boats

Five Loads Reported Saved, but Waves, Darkness Hamper Search for Others

By the Associated Press

Toulon, France (Monday), Jan. 22.—Wild seas added to the difficulties of rescue ships early today searching for the 900 passengers and crew members who yesterday abandoned the burning 11,669-ton Italian liner Orazio in the Western Mediterranean.

Italian line officials in Genoa said all had been picked up by the 23,255-ton Italian Line Conte Biancamino, but reports from French destroyers at the scene said only five lifeboats had been found, indicating possible heavy loss of life. Among the Orazio's passengers were Renato Firenze, Italian Minister to Panama, and Paul Van Zeeland, former Belgian premier, who was believed to have boarded the ship at Barcelona.

Waves Scatter Boats

Storm and darkness caused the rescue ships to grope cautiously in the western Mediterranean, where the Orazio burned 100 miles off Barcelona.

The high waves tossed and scattered over a wide area the lifeboats into which the 600 passengers and 300 crewmen were forced to escape when the Orazio's master abandoned an all-day fight against flames which swept the decks, end to end.

At Marseille, the return of two French destroyers which sped to the scene when the Orazio broadcast an SOS yesterday was awaited eagerly.

Cause Unknown

They picked up two of the lifeboats. Other ships were reported to have picked up three more. But the number of occupants of the boats was not known here, and only the scantiest information could be obtained.

Cause of the fire was undetermined.

Six hundred passengers were reported aboard the liner, in addition to a crew of 300, when the liner sent her first message Sunday morning to say she was afire 100 miles off Barcelona.

After the crew and passengers had made a desperate but futile effort to check the flames all afternoon, the liner's master sent another SOS at 6 p. m. Sunday (1 p. m. E. S. T.), saying:

"Taking to the boats—all ships approaching in darkness beware."

The liner left Genoa Saturday en route to Barcelona, first stop on a voyage to Valparaiso, Chile. Aboard were many South Americans and Italians, including an Italian aeronautical mission to Bolivia.

An Italian steamer turned off its course to join the two French destroyers in answering the Orazio's call.

Other vessels also were reported to have gone to her aid.

The two destroyers were ordered back after reporting picking up one boatload each of survivors, and were expected to dock this morning. The Italian ship was said to have picked up two boatloads.

British Shop For Billion in Arms Here

Morgenthau Seeks To Arrange Needed Plant Expansion to Meet Plane Orders

By Frank L. Kluckhohn.
Copyright by New York Times.

Great Britain is preparing to spend about $1,000,000,000 for the purchase of airplanes and other essential military supplies in the United States and is trying to get the necessary dollar exchange, it was learned last night in official circles.

Secretary Morgenthau has been endeavoring to find some means of facilitating the expansion of airplane engine factories to enable them to fill British orders.

He visited the Martin plant in Baltimore last week and he announced at a press conference on Thursday that he would visit others. After his visit in Baltimore he conferred at the White House with President Roosevelt and chiefs of the Army Air Corps.

It is understood, however, that some Administration leaders, including the President, are worried about the exchange situation which any such huge purchasing plan might produce.

Great Britain had about $1,250,000,000 in easily negotiable securities in this country at the outbreak of the war. Administration circles have denied that any serious amount of liquidation has taken place.

Should Great Britain, however, buy a billion dollars worth of war materials it obviously would be difficult for her to get dollar exchange without extensive liquidation and the Administration here is apprehensive of its possible effect upon domestic securities markets.

May Balance Losses

Some fear exists in official quarters that if the British finance a vast expansion of airplane plants in this country a situation easily might arise wherein the United States might be left "holding the bag."

Expansion of plants is necessary, however, if British orders are to be filled, because the French already have placed orders for about 6,500 planes, which will utilize almost all of the surplus production capacity of American airplane factories.

It was pointed out in some quarters, however, that such British purchases might tend to offset the loss of American trade in other products resulting from the British blockade against Germany and restrictions on British purchases.

In the field of tobacco exports to Great Britain, a matter of particular concern at present, the British are said to have agreed to take 40,000,000 pounds of government held tobacco in addition to open market purchases. Last week, however, a ban was placed on tobacco purchases here.

The United States also is being forced, according to some officials, out of what was in 1938 its leading Latin-American market—Argentina—because Great Britain is buying up Argentine wheat and meat products and forcing Argentina to buy in England commodities which it requires. To a modified extent, it is said, the same thing is happening in Brazil.

Hornblow Meets a Crisis And Masters the Inner Beast

District Automobile Inspection Station No. 2, Jan. 21.—Down through the ages, each great man has had his weakness. As Achilles had his vulnerable heel; as mighty Samson was powerless without his hair, so, too, do the Hornblows have a flaw. That flaw is temper.

Through the generations, the Hornblow wrath has been a fearsome thing. Slow to arouse, our anger contains a quality that strikes fear into the breasts of men.

And today, as I made my way across town to the inspection station, I was consumed with rage.

Reviewing the course of the last few days, I could not escape the feeling that I was being persecuted. Never before in a career studded with bright journalistic accomplishments had I encountered the setbacks which had marked this assignment from the outset. Someone, I felt . . . perhaps a jealous colleague . . . must have helped bring about the unhappy series of events which was delaying my success.

Such were my thoughts as I arrived at the intersection of Twelfth street and E southwest, and swung sharply to the left. Two blocks away I could see the yawning apertures in the rear of the inspection station. Well this, at least, I thought should not take long.

Traffic had grown heavier here, and I picked my way carefully past a long line of cars, which, for some reason not immediately apparent, did not move at all, but remained motionless, their motors idling, while life went on about them. For a moment I was tempt-

British Destroyer Sunk, 81 Lost; Russian Air Bases Reported Raided

Soviets Suffer Heavy Casualties, Bombers Halted, Helsinki Reports

By the Associated Press

Helsinki, Jan. 21.—The Finish army announced today the repulse of Russian atacks on the Karelian Isthmus with "heavy casualties" suffered by the invaders.

It also reported the capture of "a few enemy strong points" in the lower part of the Eastern Front.

As cloudy skies brought relief to the Finns today from the almost daily pounding by Russian bombers, the high command said two civilians were killed and 22 others wounded in yesterday's raids. It charged a hospital marked with Red Cross emblems was bombed.

Estonian Bases Used

It said that from "enemy airmen who fell into our hands yesterday it is clear that air bases situated in Estonia are being used at least for air raids on southwest Finland."

Russia gained the right to establish bases in Estonia as well as on Latvian and Lithuanian soil in a series of pacts last year. It was the failure of negotiations for a similar pact with Finland for bases and other concessions which led to the Russian-Finnish conflict.

In reply to the Russian air war the Finns said they had shot down 11 Russian bombers and an observation balloon and bombed "certain enemy air bases."

Red Bases Bombed

[The Helsinki radio claimed Finnish fliers had bombed the Russian air bases at Baltiski and other points along the Estonian coast, the United Press reported from Helsinki. The Swedish foreign ministry in Stockholm was quoted as saying it had "confirmed" the attack on Estonia, but Tallin "dispatches said "nothing is known" of any Finnish air offensive.

[A Copenhagen newspaper, Berlinske Tidende, said also that the Finnish air force had bombed Kronstadt, Soviet Naval base in the Gulf of Finland.

[These reports were similar to frequent previous reports of Finnish air attacks on Soviet bases. They were not confirmed by the Finnish government.—Editor's note.]

The Finnish communique, reporting military developments yesterday, said two enemy attacks "after powerful artillery preparation" had been repulsed near Taipale.

Turku, Finland, Jan. 21.—This seaside industrial city, 250 miles from the nearest battle line, together with the peaceful towns and villages around it, has become a critical front in the Soviet-Finnish war.

Turku, Finland's first port and her lifeline to the west, is the chief objective in Russia's efforts to knock out Finland, now that Russia's armies have been virtually stopped for the winter. Russia's aim is to bring Finland to her knees by paralyzing her economic life and breaking the morale of her civilian population.

There can be no doubt of this to anyone, who has made, as I and other correspondents are making, a first-hand inspection of Turku and other purely civilian places which are catching the full fury of Russia's aerial offensive.

There can be no other explanation

Retreating Reds Turn and Fight

With the Finnish Northern Army, Jan. 21 (AP).—The Russian army on the Salla front above the Arctic Circle today checked its retreat and engaged the Finns in heavy fighting in the vicinity of Markajaryi, 50 miles from the Russian border.

Finns from forest positions behind a ridge said they could see an occasional glow from a cigarette and the silhouette of Russian tanks.

They said their losses were about 40 dead against heavier Russian losses in the past few days.

The body of one Finn was found yesterday stripped of outer clothing, weapons and skis. A Finnish officer said the equipment and clothes had been taken by the Russians.

The Finns said Russians at Markajarvi are strongly entrenched in dugouts forming a semicircle west of the village.

Russian ski patrols, Finnish sources said, came within a few feet of a Finnish outpost during the night and exchanged rifle fire before falling back.

Markajarvi is the main barrier to the Finnish advance against Salla.

Boy's Legs Frozen as Cold Continues Grip on District

Winter continued to hold the Nation in an icy grip yesterday. A 7-year-old Alexandria boy faces possible amputation of both legs, frozen below the knees, and the United States' death toll from traffic accidents, fires and other causes exceeded 150 for the week-end.

Skaters thronged the Reflecting Pool and the ice-locked Potomac River as thermometers rose from 16 degrees at 12:30 a. m. to 31 degrees at 2 p. m. Fair and continued cold weather, with the mercury falling to 15 degrees, shortly before dawn, was forecast for today.

Donnell Vaughn, colored, who had been missing from his home since Thursday, was in a critical condition in Alexandria Hospital after he was found with both legs frozen in a car on an Alexandria parking lot early yesterday.

Clear, cold weather throughout the United States was expected to continue today with indications of only slight moderation, the Associated Press reported.

Citrus and vegetable crops, valued at millions of dollars in Southern States, were threatened by near freezing temperatures.

A Warship Goes Down

By Raymond Daniell

London, Jan. 21.—Heavy week-end losses to British and neutral merchant shipping were climaxed tonight with the admiralty announcement that the destroyer Grenville had been sunk by a "mine or torpedo" in the North Sea with a loss of 81 officers and men.

Sinking of the 1,485-ton Grenville, a flotilla leader of the "G" class destroyers, marked Britain's twenty-first acknowledged naval loss of the war, and the fifth destroyer loss.

In compensation, the British noted reports from the captains of two Scandinavian merchant ships indicating the sinking of two German submarines. The master of the Swedish motorship Pajala, 6,865 tons, one of six merchant ships sunk since Friday, said he saw British warships make a direct hit on the conning tower of the German submarine which torpedoed his vessel without warning off Kirkwall Saturday.

Submarine Explodes

The master of the Norwegian merchantman Notos, said a submarine which attacked his ship Saturday off Scotland apparently blew up and sank just after a torpedo passed the bow of the Notos. There was no official claim made in either case, however.

Meanwhile, Royal Air Force planes countered German aerial attacks on British shipping by raiding four German patrol vessels off Helgoland, German naval base, Saturday.

The four Nazi vessels, which the British charge are advance listening posts to warn the Germans of approaching British bombers, answered with heavy anti-aircraft fire. The British planes dropped several bombs, but no sinkings were claimed.

Tanker Is Destroyed

At the same time it was announced that the 7,807-ton tanker Caroni River had been destroyed by an explosion, believed to have been caused by a mine or a torpedo, off the southwest coast. Between 12 and 20 were injured, and one naval officer was said to have had both legs broken.

The Blue Funnel liner, Protesilaus, 9,577 tons, with a crew of 60, struck a mine off the west coast. Thirteen of the crew were injured.

The Aberdeen steamer, Ferryhill, 1,086 tons, sank within a few minutes after striking a mine off the northeast coast, and it was believed 12 of the crew were killed. Only two survivors were landed.

The Estonian Nautic was sunk off

Farm Groups Would Restore FCA Status

Independent Set-up May Become G. O. P. Campaign Issue

By Alfred Friendly

The Mexican jumping-bean history of the Farm Credit Administration has not yet reached its last chapter.

Farm organizations have been conferring recently to draft legislation on which all can agree, in order to restore the independent status of the FCA and set it up under a bipartisan, or nonpartisan, directing board.

A bill to this purpose is expected to be introduced at this session of Congress.

The three farm groups most active in the effort are the National Cooperative Council, the American Farm Bureau, and the National Grange. Their presidents have been meeting to discuss legislation, after resolutions were adopted at executive committee meetings here favoring the removal of the FCA from the Agriculture Department.

Persons familiar with the plan declined to guess on chances of passing the legislation. They pointed to the strength of the three powerful farm organizations, but also noted that the bill would be sure to encounter Administration opposition, inasmuch as it would reverse a Presidential order transferring the FCA to Agriculture under provisions of the reorganization act.

One opinion, however, was that the Administration might not be willing to enter a fight on the question if strong support were shown for the legislation. On the other hand, it was said, Republicans in Congress, who would ordinarily favor independent status for the FCA, might be lukewarm toward the bill at this time, preferring to make a campaign issue of the transfer later this year.

Southern Congressmen, blocking a bill in the House Census Committee to make reapportionment of House seats automatic after a decennial census, probably are battling a situation that isn't there.

Their opposition to a reapportionment after the 1940 census is due to a fear that it will reveal a decline in population in Southern States, and will therefore mean fewer House seats from that area.

Southern States lost representation after the 1930 census and would have lost more in 1920 but for the fact that they were able to block reapportionment at that time. They fear that 1940 will tell the same story.

Their alarm, however, is probably quite unfounded. Population experts refuse to make any flat statements, but they are reasonably certain that the population of the South has increased during the last decade relatively more than that in other areas of the country.

For the first half of the thirties, they point out, population movements were away from the cities and back to the villages, or away from the villages and back to the farms—the reverse of the trend that once sent Southerners to the big cities of the North.

Although the earlier trend was resumed during the last half of the decade, the migration back to the cities has probably not been as great as the previous movement in the opposite direction, experst believe.

In addition, the South had a generally higher birth rate than the rest of the country and there has been a marked migration of industry in the past ten years from the North to the South.

Thus it may be that the Southern legislators, in blocking a reapportionment, are losing representation for Southern voters and saving the seats of Congressmen from New England, the East Central States and the Middle West, areas that have probably lost in population in the last decade.

The United States Weather Bureau, and maybe even the Amateur Athletic Union, are un-American, according to a scathing charge recently launched by the American Institute of Weights and Measures.

The trouble, it appears, is that the bureau has fallen for the alien metric system. It has given up publishing barometric pressure in inches, and is using, instead, millibars. The athletic group has also been "bewitched into adopting the metric system," although last December it made a public confession of error and switched back to measuring foot races in yards, not meters.

What burns the institute up, according to its blast, is "the levity with which a bureaucratic decision deprived millions of Americans of the ability to read the daily weather maps" and made their barometers obsolete.

A devastating picture is painted of the average American family sitting disconsolate before its tried and tested barometer, unable to correlate it with the bureau's publications unless there is a conversion table handy. And who wants an old conversion table cluttering things up around the house?

The eighth American Scientific Congress is going to meet here next May, and the institute is going to be on hand, it promises. And with an unmistakable note of menace in its voice, it reminds advocates of the "prometric propaganda," that "we shall naturally be represented in the congress." Where, no doubt, the item will be called to the attention of the Dies Committee.

Louisiana House Votes on 20 Bills in Brief Sabbath Session

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Gov. Earl Long laughs in a special session of the Louisiana Legislature as his opponent, Senator James A. Noe, futilely tries to introduce bills against Long's administration

By the Associated Press

Baton Rouge, La., Jan. 21.—In a 40-minute Sabbath session, a docile House of Representatives sped toward enactment today 20 bills recommended by Gov. Long in a move his opponents charge was prompted by his desire to overcome "repudiation" at the polls.

Convoked in a special six-day session yesterday by Long, the legislators, many of them "lame ducks" defeated in Tuesday's primary, proceeded much as they did when Long's brother, the late Huey P. Long, ruled the domain as "Kingfish."

The bills were passed by the House on first reading yesterday and in today's routine session, unattended by Long, they received the second reading. Another session tomorrow is expected to complete House action and the measures will go to the Senate, which did not meet today. Final passage is expected by midweek.

Meanwhile Sam H. Jones, Lake Charles attorney, whom Long must defeat in a runoff Democratic primary February 20 if he is to remain Governor for the next four years, continued to denounce from the stump the special legislative session.

He said it was nothing but a Long maneuver to curry support from the voters, and charged Long was forced to institute some reform measures by his "repudiation" at the polls Tuesday, when Long failed by 100,000 votes to obtain as many votes as his four opponents for Governor.

Jones was runner-up and went into the runoff.

Some bills Long laid before the Assmbly repeal "dictator laws" enacted during Huey's regime.

Jones today conferred with State Senator James A. Noe, who, after being defeated Tuesday, joined with Jones in an effort to defeat Long by a fusion of their campaign organizations.

Noe tried Saturday to introduce numerous bills in the special session, but was blocked at every turn by Long's legislative leaders.

6% Budget Cut Is Economy Goal budget estimates in committee.

Praise came, meanwhile, for the resolution by Senator Harrison (Democrat), of Mississippi, calling for a joint Congressional study of budgetary and taxing problems before taking action on either.

Ernest Angell, chairman of the National Economy League, in a statement said:

"Whether concurred in or not by the House, Senator Harrison's resolution . . . is a real sign of Congressional progress toward the league's principle of a 'unified Governmental fiscal policy.'

"The Harrison resolution is a step toward a much needed reform in our budget procedure. Permanent legislation is needed to recast the functions of the various committees of the Senate and the House so that in future the Congress will act upon the budget as a whole, having in mind the revenues needed, as well as the limits which must be imposed on expenditures to effect a balance."

The rules committeemen planned to report the Dies resolution to the House in its brief session today, before the Borah funeral, and sponsors of the proposal intended to call it up on the floor tomorrow with debate limited to one hour. With adoption of the continuance resolution, House members expected a separate resolution alloting the committee $100,000 to conduct its investigations this year to encounter little difficulty.

Legislation to provide fresh aid for Finland in her resistance to Soviet invasion was expected last night to come from efforts of RFC officials and members of Congress over the week-end.

Senator Brown (Democrat), of Michigan, disclosed that compromise legislation was being drafted to harmonize his own proposal for a $60,000,000 unrestricted loan and President Roosevelt's project for strictly civilian assistance.

The proposed measure is expected to provide increased capital for the Export-Import Bank, permitting that institution to make $15,000,000 available to Finland in addition to the $10,000,000 credit previously provided for non-military supplies.

To the Export-Import Bank, it is expected, will be left the question of whether the Finns may use the funds for military equipment of which they are in the greatest need.

Carnegie Endowment Reports

The Congressional move went forward as the Carnegie Endowment for International Peace made public parts of confidential reports recently received from European countries on the possibility of outside help for Finland.

Declaring that if Finland falls, "Sweden will almost certainly fall under German control," the report adds:

"If America decides to do nothing (for the Finns), then the expectation is that the Scandinavian countries will go down one by one."

The report declared that England is not in position to help Finland both because she needs all the munitions she can obtain for her own use and because English intervention in support of Finland would precipitate immediate intervention by Germany in all the Scandinavian countries.

It points to Germany's need for Swedish iron ore and her desire to control them absolutely.

"There is reason to believe," it says, "that the recent order to its merchant shipping now in foreign ports to run the gantlet of the blockade and return to Baltic harbors increases the likelihood of an ultimate German attack upon the Scandinavian countries."

Norse Strength Listed

The Foreign Policy Association said in a report that Sweden, Norway and Finland, if they decided to make common cause, could put into the field about 1,000,000 trained soldiers, 400 to 600 fighting planes, 14 coast defense ships or battleships, 35 submarines and almost 150 small naval vessels.

United, the Scandinavian states are "potentially powerful," said the report; divided they are "strategically and tactically weak." None of them will make common cause with the Soviet Union. The British blockade has aroused their bitter antagonism but German mines and torpedoes are resented even more.

"Under these circumstances," A. Randle Elliott stated, in summing up the report which he prepared for the association, "the least of several evils for each of the Oslo states may be to cast its lot with Britain and France. Already sentiment in both the low countries (Belgium and Holland) and in Scandinavia is overwhelmingly proally."

Winston Churchill, first lord of the British admiralty, on Saturday appealed to the neutrals to join Britain and France.

That tangible military collaboration among the northern states is not impracticable is concluded by Mr. Elliott from the revival of a joint Swedish-Finnish scheme for defending the Aaland Islands after the Soviet invasion of Finland. Last week former Foreign minister Richard J. Sandler demanded that Sweden send troops to the Aaland Islands to give "real help" to the Finns.

McNutt, Garner Plan Fight for Ohio Support

Strategy Favorable To Roosevelt Seen With Indianan in Contest

By the United Press

A sharp fight between Paul V. McNutt and Vice President John N. Garner for Ohio's 52 delegates to the Democratic National Convention began taking shape last night, although President Roosevelt has a tacit promise of the delegation's support.

McNutt's managers indicated that if Garner's name is entered in Ohio's Presidential preference primaries this spring, McNutt's also will be entered, although the Federal Security Administrator has announced that he will not be a candidate if Mr. Roosevelt seeks a third term.

Garner strategists implied last week that they would seek a delegation pledged to the Texan inasmuch as the Buckeye State's "favorite son" candidate, Senator Vic Donahey, has announced he will run for re-election to the Senate.

Support Roosevelt

Concurrently, Ohio Democratic chieftains sent word to Mr. Roosevelt that the State's delegation would go along with him if he wants a third term. The President is said to have declined to give the written permission required by Ohio law before his name can be placed on the preferential ballot.

If, however, McNutt contested against Garner, the President would have a "friend in court" who could reserve for the Chief Executive whatever delegates he won.

McNutt's friends feel that the handsome Hoosier thus would be in a more favorable position to receive Mr. Roosevelt's support if the latter does not run, and they point out that the primary would be an ideal spot for McNutt to try his political wings.

G. O. P. Eyes Midwest

Chicago, Jan. 21 (AP).—Republican chairmen from ten Corn Belt States today discussed a proposal to hold a Midwestern party rally in Chicago as a prelude to the 1940 campaign.

Chairman A. K. Stiles, of Illinois, who called today's meeting, said a final decision would be made in a few days.

Participation in the discussion was Homer E. Capehart, Indiana Republican leader, who sponsored a giant "corn field rally" on his farm near Washington, Ind., in the 1938 campaign.

Stiles said Capehart had announced he was not a candidate for office but had agreed to cooperate in sponsoring the meeting.

In an effort to revive Republican strength for the 1936 political campaign, Republicans from ten Midwestern States held a "grass roots" conference at Springfield, Ill. State chairmen said the proposed Chicago meeting would have similar objectives.

Present today, in addition to Stiles, were chairmen from Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, South Dakota and Wisconsin, and National Committeeman William Stern, of North Dakota, which has no chairman.

Sight Restored To White House Telegraph Chief

Jules A. Rodier, 40 years a telegraph operator at the White House, will be back at his key in about ten days, thanks to the skill of a Navy surgeon.

RODIER

Virtually blind in his left eye for 56 years as the result of an accident suffered when he was 12, Rodier underwent an operation January 8 which has resulted in restoration of his vision, it was disclosed Saturday.

Modestly, the surgean who gave back the telegrapher the use of his left eye said the operation was not an extraordinary one and requested that his name be unmentioned. However, to Rodier, who is chief of communications at the White House, it was little short of a miracle.

"Since I was 12 I could only distinguish light in that eye," he said. "Now I can clearly make out objects. The operation, besides, probably prevented the right eye, which has always been very strong, from becoming affected."

Rodier is convalescing in his home at Lanham, Md. He expects to be back on the job the latter part of this month.

U. S., Canada To Discuss Treaty

The draft treaty submitted by the State Department to Canada in May, 1938, contained eight main headings. All but two, perhaps three, of these have been agreed upon.

The question of allocation of the expense — totaling somewhere around $250,000,000 — has not yet been entirely solved. The United States is to develop at it's own expense the international rapids section of the St. Lawrence, involving construction of a 27-foot deep canal around the rapids. The canal will be on both the Canadian and American sides of the border.

The difficulty met with in allocation of the expense has occurred in this way: The two countries drew up a balance sheet giving estimated future expenses, and past expenses incurred in developing the Great Lakes-St. Lawrence system up to this point. The system already includes construction of canals and dams, dredging, diversion, and the like, and Canada has done the larger share of it, as witness the great Welland Canal linking Lakes Ontario and Erie.

America to Spend More

Future and past expenses were added together and this figure divided by two, thus giving the share of each. From this share was subtracted the amount one or the other had already paid.

The way it came out, the United States will spend $3 to $4 for every one Canada spends in future construction.

But the difficulty is that Canada has sought to put down as part of the past expenses completed projects which the United States negotiators do not think should be included.

It is hoped to iron out this point during the Washington conversations.

Another development is that the ten years estimated for completion of the deep waterway, advanced when the draft treaty was sent Canada, have now been pared down to five to seven years.

Although some technical and engineering questions still remain to be considered, the negotiators meet again with the political atmosphere cleared.

Aviatrix Urges Emergency Women Fliers

Plan for Training Will Be Presented To War Department

Women flyers will spread their wings to an unprecedented scope, if Cecile Hamilton has her way.

This young aviatrix from New York wants to see a band of feminine flyers under the War Department with training for service in emergencies — disasters or war. And she is here to present the plan to the Department, as soon as she has talked to enough aviation experts to be sure of every point in it.

CECILE HAMILTON

"Now don't get the idea that I'm trying to militarize women," she warned yesterday afternoon, as her proposal crept out in conversation at the meeting of members of the Ninety-Nine Club, an organization of women pilots.

"I'm not so concerned whether women put on dashing uniforms and run around, clicking their heels. But I am concerned over the fact that we have so many competent women flyers in this country who are eager to be of service and who haven't sufficient outlet for it."

Help in Disaster

As an outlet, Miss Hamilton visualizes that they could be used in such situations as this:

"In disasters they might fly over inaccessible areas to drop equipment by parachute, and, if necessary, girls who are trained nurses might jump.

"In case of war, women pilots might prove useful in 'ferrying' planes from factory to front, or from factory to ship. Women might be able to manage flying ambulances, carrying wounded to hospitals far behind the lines. And if many of the trained men fliers were called into service, women might well be needed to fill some of these vacancies," Miss Hamilton said.

But the first thing in any such program would be to determine how much women could do, whether they could handle the equipment on these most strenuous flights, she said. So she suggests 25 women fliers be the nucleus of the experiment, to be expanded as it proves its way.

Miss Hamilton gave up a job at the Westchester Airport near New York to come here to promote her plan.

Flew in England

She learned to fly in England in 1934 when she was 19. In 1936 she operated a ground school of her own in California. There she became interested in the Women's Air Reserve, and hopes to start a squadron here in the next month.

Miss Hamilton is a commercial pilot with more than 600 hours "legally logged," she said, but with an unofficial total of more than 1,000. Her address here is 1637 Nineteenth street northwest.

The Washington-Baltimore-Richmond section of the Ninety-nine Club yesterday met at the Raleigh Hotel to plan a dinner dance to raise its share of the Amelia Earhart Scholarship Fund. Scholarships will be awarded to women pilots, who meet certain qualifications, to learn instrument flying.

Kidnaping Victim Shoots Herself

Bureau of Investigation, said he had "no comment" when he was asked about reports that Miss McElroy recently had undergone renewed questioning by FBI agents about the kidnaping.

Clarence Stevens, one of the men sought by Federal agents as a member of the McElroy kidnaping gang, still is at large.

Both of the other three kidnapers, Walter and George McGee, brothers, are serving life sentences in the Missouri Penitentiary. A third member of the gang, Clarence Click, who lived on the farm where she was held prisoner, was released in 1938 on conditional commutation, after serving seven-twelfths of an eight-year sentence.

The two brothers, interviewed in the State penitentiary tonight, mourned their one-time victim's suicide as that of "a sister."

Walter, now 34, George, now 29, spoke of Miss McElroy as "the best friend we ever had."

Walter, saved from death on the gallows by Miss McElroy's plea to Gov. Guy B. Park, said:

"I wouldn't have felt the loss of my own sister more. I can't believe it."

Miss McElroy had not visited them since December, 1936, they said, but had kept in touch with them through their sister, Mrs. Dessa Fisher, of Leavenworth, Kans.

"She was very good to us," George said simply. "She sent us lots of things and it was largely because of her influence I started studying."

A Disarming Captive

"The day we got her she acted like she had known us all her life," Walter said. "She told us she was our friend but that she didn't like our racket."

"She was the best friend we ever had," George added, "and about the only one."

As guards took the two men back to their cells, George turned to a reporter.

"Make it as easy on her as you can, won't you?" he asked.

Police found a small-caliber pistol identified by Henry F. McElroy, jr., as his sister's, on the floor near the divan in the sunroom where Miss McElroy's maid, Mrs. Inez Strange, discovered her mistress' body shortly after 9 o'clock this morning.

A police examination disclosed powder burns on the dead girl's right hand. The right side of her face also was burned by powder, indicating, officers said, the gun had been held close to her head when the fatal shot was fired. Police made paraffin tests, which they said showed Miss McElroy's right hand had held and fired the death weapon.

Her body was clad in a gray lounging suit, slacks and jacket. A pair of dark glasses covered her eyes.

Appealed for Captors

Her death was the tragic end of seven harrowing years, beginning with her kidnaping in 1933. Then followed the trial of three of her four abductors; her successful appeal to the Governor to commute the death sentence of one of them; the ousting of her father as city manager in the breakdown of the Pendergast machine last spring and finally her father's death last summer.

Miss McElroy was kidnaped from her bath, May 27, 1933, chained to the basement wall of a farm house near Shawnee, Kans., and released after being held prisoner 29 hours. Her father paid $30,000 ransom for her.

During Walter McGee's trial McElroy's was asked by a defense attorney: "But your daughter was not harmed?"

"Yes," McElroy replied, "my daughter has been injured—to the extent that I fear she never will get over it."

Lincoln, Roosevelt Politicians— And Why Not? Asks Sherwood

Mr. and Mrs. Raymond Massey are shown at their hotel prior to their dinner date last night at the White House. Massey and Robert E. Sherwood (inset), author of "Abe Lincoln in Illinois," are among the notables here for the world premiere of the film in which Massey portrays Lincoln

By Scott Hart
Post Staff Writer

Robert E. Sherwood, who wrote "Abe Lincoln in Illinois," observed here yesterday that Lincoln "was one of the slickest politicians of all time," who was helped toward the White House "by a whole pack of Jim Farleys."

And Sherwood said "it always gets my goat when they speak of politicians in the White House, when they apply it to Roosevelt. They say 'he is a good politician.' Well what do they want in the White House—a good dentist? Lincoln had to be a politician to get there, to stay there through four years of storm."

"Nobody will ever understand him, his genius. . . . When you know a man's weakness, too, his frailties, his greatness, and what he accomplished . . . my admiration is boundless; I never could become so excited about any other character . . ."

Plane Sent for Actor

And while the playwright, a tall, slender man with an actor's face, was talking this way at the Hay-Adams House, one block beyond at the Carlton Hotel confusion and consternation were being confounded in long-distance telephone calls.

Raymond Massey, who with a troupe of other celebrities, including Sherwood, was to attend a White House dinner last night in advance of personal appearances at the world premiere of the motion picture, "Abe Lincoln in Illinois," here tonight, had got his transportation connections jammed in Pennsylvania. A delayed train had brought him late into Pittsburgh and press agents and managerial panjandrums were dithering.

The upshot was to charter a plane here, rush it to Harrisburg, Pa., and bring Mr. and Mrs. Massey to the Capital. They arrived shortly after 5 p. m., and there was considerable talk at the airport about how old Abe himself had traveled in horse and buggy and of how times change. Crowds surged in to see the actor and the usual crowd-sigh went up as he passed.

Then Robert E. Lee, a native of Massachusetts and now a Washington motorcycle policeman, escorted the Massey car to the Hay-Adams House, followed by the press agents and the relieved managerial staff. But not until the tall, gaunt actor, who was dressed in a gray large-plaid suit and a slight red bow tie had embraced Lee for the cameramen on alighting from the Pennsylvania Central airliner.

In a brief ensuing interview, Massey in off-stage personality suggested the friendly warmth of the sad tall man he portrays. He talked mostly about technical handling of the movie and reminisced in wisps. Under pressure of time for his White House engagement, he stayed agreeable and kind. There is no temperamental hokus-pokus in him. When he said he had put everything he had into certain parts to try and capture the moods or frustrations or hopes of Lincoln, the observation seemed a renewed challenge to himself rather than to hearers who would put it on paper.

Play Writen for Massey

Sherwood, earlier, had indicated that there was Massey in his mind before the Pulitzer prize play took shape. Massey had told Sherwood that he wanted to play young Lincoln, and Sherwood then felt that the actor's English background might be disadvantageous. "But I saw him in Ethan Frome, later, and knew he could do it."

Sherwood speaks of Massey in the highest personal and professional feeling. "He becomes better all the time," he repeated. "Better." Sherwood set to work. The long research was behind him. He wrote the play in two weeks. "I had thought it out, almost knew it by heart," he said.

"I think the story of Lincoln is the story of the United States. We are now at the point Lincoln was when he had to accept his responsibility and destiny," he observed. Here for the opening of the movie tonight are Ruth Gordon, cast as Mary Todd Lincoln; Mary Howard, cast as Ann Rutledge, and others.

Theater Picketing Voted by Group

The Washington Civil Rights Committee last night voted to picket Keith's Theater tonight. A host of notables is scheduled to see the world premiere of "Abe Lincoln in Illinois."

The move was decided upon at a meeting of the committee as a protest, it was announced, against the policy of barring colored persons.

Keith's management pointed out that colored persons are not admitted to any Washington theaters except those operated expressly for colored persons.

Views Differ On Financing Child Welfare

Homer Folks Favors Federal Aid; Others Warn of Debt Problem

The question of funds for financing the attainment of goals set by the White House Conference on Children in a Democracy brought forth more discussion last night.

"Federal participation" was the answer given by Homer Folks, of New York, veteran welfare worker and chairman of the conference reports committee, speaking in a post-conference discussion on the American Forum of the Air. The conference last week indorsed "the practice of Federal grants."

Representative Rogers (Republican), of Massachusetts, participant in the forum, said:

"I should like to see frequent meetings in Washington of representatives of the various States to plan ways and means of promoting health and education in a way that would not be a burden to all of us, that would not increase taxation and that would not add to our already staggering debt."

Issues Warning

At another point she warned: "We cannot expect the Federal Government to finance every undertaking. Private responsibility must be aggressively encouraged. If the Federal Government is loaded too heavily, our complete economic structure is threatened."

William L. Chenery, editor of Collier's Magazine, pointed out that when the conference program takes the form of "legislation, tangible appropriations or taxes, beyond all doubt blood pressures will be raised.

"I am not one of those who fear that the American people are not willing to make real sacrifices to maintain the American way of life. I think, however, it behooves all who seriously care about children as well as for our liberal democratic form of life and government to see to it that particular plans of improvement are soundly financed."

Miss Perkins Chairman

Secretary of Labor Perkins, who was chairman of the national conference which closed Saturday, served also as chairman of the forum. Among the persons who made talks or joined in the panel discussion were Dr. William G. Carr, of the National Education Association; Frank P. Fenton, of the American Federation of Labor; Ralph Hetzel, of the Congress of Industrial Organizations; Mrs. Saidie Orr Dunbar, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs; Mrs. J. K. Pettengill, president of the National Congress of Parents and Teachers.

long cold siege. They estimated consumption last week at 1,500,000 tons.

Flood dangers mounted in Pennsylvania with a forecast of zero to five degrees below today. Virtually every river in the State was frozen over. Navigation was stilled. The Weather Bureau reported conditions getting worse hourly.

The Allegheny, Monongahela and Ohio rivers were choked. Numerous upstate points on the Allegheny reported conditions duplicating those which preceded the disastrous St. Patrick's Day flood of 1936.

The Ohio was closed from Pittsburgh to Montgomery Dam, 31 miles below, where the ice was almost 5 inches thick with running ice below.

Forecasts for the South were fair with continued cold today and slightly moderated temperatures tomorrow. New Orleans had 32 degrees yesterday morning; Jacksonville and Pensacola, 25; Atlanta, 15; Birmingham, 12, and Chattanooga, 10.

New England continued cold with Boston reporting 26 degrees around noon yesterday after a minimum of 13 in the early morning. Elsewhere in New England the mercury dropped to zero with cloudiness and snow forecast and little change in temperature. Two persons were killed to death in their homes.

New York had temperatures of 13 to 15 in the night. The Weather Bureau predicted 17 last night and "not so cold" today. Saturday was the coldest day of the winter with minus 6 degrees at Babylon, Long Island.

Deaths due to the cold and exposure totaled 43; to traffic accidents 36, to fires 58 and to other causes 22. The heaviest death list was in Ohio with 18. Michigan had 13, Kentucky 12, and Wisconsin and Missouri 10 each.

Bishop O'Hara Assails Russia; Cites Laws Coming 'Not From God'

to the opening of the third session of the Seventy-sixth Congress, then charged that "Russia, in endeavoring to force communism upon its people, thought it necessary to destroy religion and to form anti-God societies so that the sanction of law might be destroyed in the minds of the people.

Tyranny Assailed

"If the State is supreme, if man is a subject of the State and has no right except those he receives from the State, if the sanction of law comes not from God but from the dictator or his council, then there is nothing that the State may not demand from the individual, provided the ruler believes it to be for the advancement of the State.

"Purge after purge has taken place in Russia. Thousands have been executed in cold blood without even a trial because the dictator believed it to be for the benefit of the Soviet Union, yet the rank and file of the Russian peasants have recognized the injustice of the dictator."

The Very Rev. Robert J. White, dean of the university's law school, who helped initiate the "red mass" custom here last year during the institution's golden jubilee observance, celebrated the mass, which opened with an impressive procession of the law school's faculty.

Led by Sisters of the Catholic University Nursing School, and garbed in red and blue-trimmed black academic robes, they walked slowly into the crypt to the accompaniment of chanting by the Catholic University choir.

Officers of the Mass

A few minutes later, the participating ecclesiastical dignitaries stepped to the front of the crypt, the officers of the mass taking their places near the white-clothed altar. They were Father White, the Rev. John P. Mayer, O. S. A., and Rev. Thomas P. Garrett, O. S. A., both of the Augustinian College, Catholic University, deacon and sub-deacon, respectively; the Rev. William J. Lallou, of the university, master of ceremonies, and the Rev. Walter J. Schmitz, S. S., assistant.

In conducting the "Red Mass," they followed a custom which has prevailed in France and England for centuries, but not until later in the United States. In those countries, it was traditional for the judges and legislators to participate in such a mass at the beginning of sessions.

Conscious of their limitations, the judges met in the holy sacrifice of the Mass to seek the aid of the Holy Spirit, symbolized by the flaming fire of divine love and wisdom.

Initial Appearance

Making his initial appearance since elevation to the episcopate, Bishop O'Hara early in his message warned "that whenever the proper end of the individual is lost sight of, law schools, lawyers and governments go astray."

"Perjury, intimidation, false witness are all lawful in his code, provided they serve the utilitarian purpose," he pointed out, adding that "his one determination is to win his case at any cost, and since he has eliminated God and destroyed reason he has nothing to fear as long as he evades the clutches of the civil law."

Bishop O'Hara said "I need not tell you that such characters exist, and that they dignify themselves by the name of lawyers. The gangster profession would die a natural death tomorrow if it were not for crooked lawyers who live on gold that these gunmen have taken at the point of a gun."

Worse Than Gangsters

"In many ways they are worse than the gangsters because their profession marks them as the protectors of the people, guardians of society, and they prey like so much vermin on the very people that their knowledge should protect."

"Law schools, which once taught law and its correlative justice, have degenerated into institutions teaching laws rather than law. Some prominent schools are now even abandoning a teaching of laws as well as law, and they have preferred to ignore all forms of human conduct. . . ."

Boy, 6, Playing With Rifle, Kills Washington Girl, 14

Doris Bomgardner (lower left), 14, was fatally wounded yesterday when she went to the basement of a neighbor's home to take her sister, Patricia (lower right), 7, home for supper. Dean L. Ewart and Richard Drew (upper picture) were among the children who witnessed the shooting. The children were playing with a .22 rifle they found in the home

Sears, Roebuck & Co., was summoned from a trip to nearby Virginia after the shooting, and Mrs. Bartelmes was notified at a Silver Spring, Md., theater where she is a cashier.

Bartelmes said he believed he had loaded the rifle several months ago when he thought he heard a prowler at the rear of the house and had forgotten to unload it, police said. A shotgun in the same closet was unloaded.

Doris was in the eighth grade at Powell Junior High School. William entered first grade at the Raymond School last fall.

Young Friends Awed . . . . . .

A score of young friends stood silently in the darkness as Doris' body was removed from the home.

One girl sobbed, "If only he hadn't found the gun. He didn't mean to do it."

At the home of Doris' parents, Mr. and Mrs. Alvin Herbert Bomgardner, the grief-stricken parents could not speak. Her father kept murmuring, "She did what we told her."

Doris's brothers and sisters, with the exception of Patricia, are too young to realize what happened. They are Mary Margaret, 4; Alvin, jr., 18 months, and John, 5. Bomgardner is manager of an auto supply store.

skull. He died three hours later without regaining consciousness. The automobile, owned by Harry L. Tetlow, 38, of Alexandria, was demolished.

A few hours earlier, Gus E. Magnusson, 35, of 1256 Thirty-first street northwest, was killed by an automobile which struck him as he stood by the side of Chain Bridge road near Langley, Va.

Magnusson, formerly a chauffeur for the Swedish Legation, was scheduled to sail February 1 to join the Finnish army in its war with Russia. Police here said he had made arrangements to have his two children cared for during his absence.

He recently served four years at Fort Myer and had been a soldier in the Swedish army.

Mary E. Hall, 72, of 1525 Half street southwest, died at Casualty Hospital of a skull fracture received January 13 when she was struck by an automobile in the 1100 block of Fourth street southeast. Police said the automobile was driven by James R. Wilson, 23, of 715 Eighth street southeast, who would be held for the coroner.

In a collision at Massachusetts avenue and Second street northwest, Cecil T. Floyd, 23, of 1908 I street northwest suffered scalp lacerations and was taken to Casualty Hospital. Police said the other automobile was driven by Pasquale J. Thalis, 22, of 733 Seventh street northwest.

ed to investigate this phenomenon. But then my mind flashed back to the purpose of my mission, and I drove doggedly on to Tenth street and turned right into the inspection station entrance.

Here I paused a moment to survey my surroundings. Up ahead were three lines of cars which, obviously, were waiting for a going over inside the station. Automatically my mind, skilled in such matters, sought out the lane containing the least number of machines.

While I was thus engaged, a burly figure emerged from the interior of the station and approached me.

"Hey, you!" he shouted, in tones I thought were menacing. "Where d'ya think you're goin'?"

I smiled. It was a question for which I had a ready answer. Carefully I explained that I had come to have my machine inspected. A strange, unbelieving look slowly overdraped his features. I was mystified.

For a moment he seemed to be struggling to find his voice. I felt a sort of pity for the fellow.

"Oh, so you came over to have your machine inspected?" he finally said.

Some strong emotion seemed to be working within the man. His face grew red and he swallowed several times.

"You came over to have your machine inspected!" he repeated in a louder tone. "Well, now, isn't that just . . . too . . . nice!"

He turned, like a maniac, I thought, and waved toward the line of cars I had just passed.

"Do you see those machines?"

I nodded, though I didn't like the way he said the word "machines."

"Well, now, let me tell you something." (He was all but shouting.) "Those machines came over to be inspected, too. And they got here before you did. And they're gonna be inspected before you are. Now, get out! And get in line where you belong!"

He started toward me . . .

The Hornblows are noted for their courage. In their makeup there is no such thing as fear. But at this time I felt that there was nothing to be gained through matching prowess with this mad man, no matter how confident I might be that in such a contest I would prevail.

For this reason, and no other, I hastily removed my car and drove speedily around the block to take my place in line.

British Take Nazi Sailors Off Japanese Ship

Seamen Were Being Sent Home From U. S. By Standard Oil

By the Associated Press

Tokyo, Jan. 21.—A British warship halted the Japanese steamer Asama Maru with a warning shot across her bows Saturday and removed 21 German merchant seamen en route from San Francisco to Japan on their way to Germany, it was disclosed today.

Passengers aboard the Asama Maru, which left San Francisco January 6, said the Germans were being sent back to the Reich by the Standard Oil Co. when they were captured by the British, within sight of Japan's east coast.

Tokyo May Protest

Terming the incident "very disagreeable," a government official today said Japan was considering a formal protest to Great Britain.

Yakichiro Suma, foreign office spokesman, said the government felt the case was "disagreeable" because the "search and arrests took place so near our shore." Officials will decide tomorrow on their course, it was indicated.

Passengers said the British indicated that the captives would be interned at Hongkong. The captives included a captain and part of a group of 40 men who formerly served on Standard Oil tankers in South American waters and were being sent home at the company's expense because of the war.

Seventeen of the German group were ignored by the British boarding party, apparently because they were unskilled seamen or because some were over 45 years of age. Two escaped by hiding, one in a false smokestack, the other in a barrel.

The incident, first verified halting of a ship in the Japanese area, was confirmed by a British embassy statement which said that the "removing of the German merchant officers and seamen from neutral vessels on the high seas was fully in accordance with international law."

Passengers said that as the Asama Maru reached sight of land proceeding toward Yokohama, a gray warship, apparently a light cruiser with its name obliterated, drew near and hoisted signals for the Japanese ship to stop. The Asama Maru continued on her way until a shot was fired.

The ship's captain, Yoshisada Watabe, said he first told the British officer there was "no reason why the Germans should be handed over" but later agreed to the removal.

Watabe declared that for an hour after the Asama Maru halted, "a semimerchantman which appeared to be armed" kept about two miles away and then disappeared.

One passenger reported a brief fistfight during the examination when a German passenger was said to have struck a British sailor.

Clouds Columbus Crew's Future

San Francisco, Jan. 21 (AP).—A spokesman for the Nippon Yusen Kaisha Steamship Line, commenting tonight upon the British seizure of 21 Nazi seamen aboard the liner Asama Maru, said it was probable his company would not contract to carry any more German subjects across the Pacific.

"We do not like to have shots fired across the bows of our ships, or have them searched and passengers removed," he said.

The incident further clouded the future for 521 crewmen of the scuttled German luxury liner Columbus, who are at the Angel Island immigration station here awaiting transportation to Germany via the Pacific and Russia.

The Columbus crewmen, whose vessel was sunk off the Atlantic Coast, are living here at a cost of $700 a day to the North German Lloyd Line, which is paying that sum to the United States Government to feed and house them.

If they venture out across the Pacific they face possible capture and internment by the British.

The N. Y. K. spokesman expressed belief the United States could not intern the seamen as Uruguay and Argentina did the crew of the scuttled warship Graf Spee, because the Columbus crewmen were not engaged in warfare and therefore have a civil status.

May Halt Repatriation

New York, Jan. 21 (AP).—A Standard Oil Co. project to send several hundred German seamen back to their homeland via Pacific routes probably will be abandoned because of the British seizure of 21 former Standard Oil employes aboard a Japanese merchant ship.

Officials of the company, which is paying board and room for about 1,000 German sailors "beached" in North and South American ports, admitted keen disappointment because of British interference.

About 200 refugees already have been sent from New York to San Francisco and others were to follow.

One official indicated that the company's only alternative may be to support them in American ports for the duration of the war. Older men and boys are sent home by way of the Mediterranean.

Carol Seeks Alliance of 4 Balkan States

Would Turn Entente Into Military Pact Against Attack

By the Associated Press

Bucharest, Jan. 21.—Rumania is seeking to turn the Balkan Entente into an outright military alliance which would protect her against attack by Russia or Hungary.

The government of King Carol, it was learned from excellent sources, opened its campaign in this direction at a meeting on the frontier last Friday between Foreign Minister Gafencu and Yugoslav Foreign Minister Cincar-Markovci, and will throw its full energy into the diplomatic struggle at the meeting of the Balkan Entente February 2.

The Balkan Entente, composed of Rumania, Yugoslavia, Greece and Turkey, was formed after the World War to oppose any eventual Bulgarian attack to regain lost territories.

Turkey already is in alliance with Britain and France, and Rumania has received guarantees of her independence from the two western European allies.

A similar defensive league of southeastern European countries—the Little Entente—was formed to hold Hungarian revisionist aims in check, but this group, under French tutelage, fell apart when Czecho-Slovakia disappeared.

Though the Balkan partners are lukewarm toward making their entente more aggressive in these dangerous times, Rumania's argument is that if other members of the entente stand by and let Rumania be partitioned it will not be long before they may face the same fate.

Gafencu's heaviest pressure will be exerted on Yugoslavia, whose assistance is vital to Rumania, and who is Rumania's only friendly neighbor.

Belgian Press Hits British Neutral Call

Dutch Papers Also Disapprove; Balkans Deeply Impressed

By James MacDonald

Copyright by New York Times

London, Jan. 21.—The Foreign Office watched with considerable interest today the reaction to Winston Churchill's speech yesterday, which declared that there was no chance of a speedy solution of the neutrals' troubles except through united action.

The speech was received with mingled feelings among the small neutrals, according to reports reaching London.

It is reported that the general impression in Brussels is not too favorable. The newspaper the National Belge headlines the speech as a "Strange Reprimand to Neutrals by Churchill" and declares editorially that "our king, our government and our parliament . . . are better placed and qualified to judge the interest of our country," than Churchill.

In The Netherlands, the Rotterdamsche Courant calls the Churchill broadcast a "Sharp Attack on Neutrals," while the Handelsblad headlines "Churchill Calls Neutrals to Arms." Observers feel that The Netherlands government has not altered the belief that if it maintains a policy of strict neutrality it is possible that Germany will not attack.

Copenhagen regards the speech as one of the most important since the war began. The Danish press gives it prominence, but it does not comment.

Churchill's utterances apparently made a deep impression in Southeast Europe. His reference to the danger of Nazi aggression, to which the Balkan and other neutrals are exposed, is recognized as true although the risk of united action against Germany is pointed out.

Berlin (Monday), Jan. 22 (U.P.).—The mouthpiece of the German Foreign Office today cautioned Europe's neutrals to turn a deaf ear to Saturday's radio suggestion by Winston Churchill, that they join the Allies lest they become victims of both Germany and Russia.

Japanese Fear Effect of U. S. Treaty Break

Expiration Leaves Tokyo at Day-to-Day Mercy of America

By the Associated Press

Tokyo, Jan. 21.—Japan feels the dangers of her international position will be greatly increased after expiration next Friday of her 28-year-old treaty of amity and commerce with the United States although some of the most-feared results apparently have been fended off or postponed.

More than ever before, Japanese leaders admit, the end of the treaty will place Japan's economic life and with it her political future at the mercy of changes across the Pacific.

Word from Washington and authoritative forecasts of Japanese government action indicate that actually trade between the two countries will continue without change in tariffs, port dues and other factors, but Japanese realize that this apparent continuity must be on a day-to-day basis and to be ended any time Washington sees fit.

Future Alarms Officials

Since the United States is both Japan's best customer and—more important these days—the chief foreign source of her war supplies, this situation makes Japanese officials view the future with foreboding.

What they fear most is the threat of an American embargo on such materials as scrap iron and oil which might stall the war machine in China.

Most of Japan's oil and gasoline comes from American wells; most of her huge scrap iron imports come from the United States. There is serious doubt here whether heavy industries could keep going at present rates if there were an American embargo.

For the first 11 months of 1939 Japan's American purchases amounted to $206,162,000 in a total trade of $878,340,000, or 33.7 per cent of her total imports.

Japan Needs Supplies

Japan's best customer, the United States, in those 11 months bought $128,851,000 worth of goods here, 17.5 per cent of a total trade of $734,117,000.

Although the trade balance favors the United States, this does not mean it is to Japan's disadvantage. Japan needs the American sources of supply far more than the United States needs its Japanese market. This has been accentuated by the European war and its drain on other possible sources.

Faced by the possibility of an American embargo and disaster to her economy, Japan has hastened to mend things with Russia. All this, observers say, is partly due to Washington's unyielding stand on a new treaty.

Italy Virtually Recognizes Wang Regime in China Before Japanese Establish Puppet Government

By the Associated Press

Rome, Jan. 21.—Italy today announced virtual recognition of a Japanese-controlled government of China under Wang Ching-Wei even before it was formed.

Foreign Minister Ciano was disclosed to have offered Wang "comradely collaboration" in a telegram which predicted "China with her great neighbor, Japan, will find a new era of prosperity and friendship."

Wang, former Chinese premier ousted from Chiang Kai-shek's regime a year ago, replied that he appreciated "the full value" of Count Ciano's message.

Chiang to Question Action

Chinese circles in Rome indicated Chiang's government would seek an explanation from Ciano. They said the telegram might result in a rupture of diplomatic relations between Italy and the present Chinese government.

Relations between Italy and Chiang's government have been no more than nominal for some time. Although China formerly ordered war supplies from Italy, foreign circles said, this trade has steadily dwindled, particularly since Chinese ports have fallen into Japanese hands.

For this reason, foreign circles said, Italy probably considers the possibilities brighter for trade with a government set up by the Japanese.

Ciano's telegram surprised most foreign representativez, including the Chinese, who first heard of it while listening to a Japanese broadcast from Tokyo.

Japanese quarters were understood to have been aware of the telegram Friday when it was sent by Ciano.

Japanese interpreted the telegram as indicating Italy's desire:

To establish an anti-Comintern front in China.

To support Japan's program for a "new order" in the Far East.

To be the first nation to formally recognize Wang's government when it is eventually formed.

Neutral spokesmen said Japan apparently was anxious for moral support from some foreign quarter for Wang and in such a case Italy would be the country most likely to lend such support in view of the close Rome-Tokyo relations.

Japanese sources in Rome indicated Wang probably would wait until the Chinese new year next month to establish his regime.

The Japanese cabinet on January 8 decided the time had come for establishment of a new central government in China under Wang Ching-wei but the actual date remains undetermined.

His proposed government, which has been reported on the point of establishment many times, eventually would function as a central regime for all Japanese-occupied territory.

Honkong, Jan. 21 (AP).—Two former followers of Wang Ching-wei today announced a purported pact between Wang and Japan which they said "would virtually reduce China to the status of a dependency of Japan."

The alleged agreement was published by the Hongkong newspaper Takungpao to which it had been sent by Kao Tsung-wu, former chief of the Asiatic affairs department of the Chinese foreign office, and Tao Hsi-sheng, Chinese writer.

The terms, embodying widespread concessions for Japan, included Chinese recognition of Manchoukuo; general cooperation among Japan, China and Manchoukuo; establishment of a common front against communism; designation of North China and Mongolia as a special zone for defense and economic development for Japan; and recognition of Japan's economic predominance.

Suma Comments

Tokyo (Monday), Jan. 22 (AP).—Yakichiro Suma, foreign office spokesman, said today the purported pact published in the Hongkong newspaper Takungpao "sounds like Chinese propaganda."

unless one supposes that the destruction, now brought on undefended or almost undefended cities, towns and villages, are simply out of an irresponsible desire to destroy life and property. Part of it does appear irresponsible but that may be attributed to a plan to worry a people at rest, interefere with their work and disrupt their whole manner of living. But at Turku the main objective undoubtedly is to hamper fatally the country's imports.

Turku has moved out as many of its inhabitants as could be spared. The rest, about 30,000 out of a normal population of 74,000 are carrying on under the threat of air raids which come almost every day and sometimes several times a day.

The people are living like gophers, always living on the rim of a dugout prepared to dash into it when danger threatens. Much of their work is done at night and they sleep in the early morning hours.

Their leaders ask with emotion when the western powers—specifically America—will send them fighter airplanes and anti-aircraft guns. They see ruin if aid does not come.

Devastation Shakes Faith

In Helsinki and on our visits to the front most of us had become too sure that Finland could hold Russia indefinitely despite the odds. A visit to this southwest corner of Finland, through the area which had been most incessantly raided by Soviet air attacks shakes that assurance.

The loss in life as the result of air raids on the civilian population has been considerable. It is extraordinarily small in proportion to the Soviet efforts, and of the destruction of planes and trained men by Finland's small air defense forces. It is estimated that Russia has lost more trained aviation personnel in its air raids than it has killed Finnish civilians.

But the property damage has been enormous. I have seen damaged factories, and I have seen leveled warehouses, whose destruction is an advantage to the Russians, although they properly are not military objectives at all. But the bulk of the destruction has been to homes and small shops. We have gone among the ruins of whole blocks of these.

Smoke is rising today from the ruins of a five-story block of flats in the center of Turku and from other ruins as a result of two raids yesterday, the heaviest air onslaught Russia has yet made on Finland. Not one of the 200 and more bombs which fell struck anything which could by any stretch of imagination be considered a military objective.

Other bombs landed in the city. One big one fell within a few feet of the Cathedral, a thirteenth century building of great historical sentimental and architectural importance, and broke all windows on that side.

Glare Lights City Turku

We arrived in Turku last night to find the city lighted with a red glare from the burning flat building and a nearby motion picture theater. We were conducted to a hotel two blocks away, where we found the chief people of the city and province, including the provincial governor, members of the chamber of commerce and representatives of the Labor Party, who were assembled to receive us and our fellow travelers who included Frederick Dorsey Stephens, director in Finland for the Hoover relief committee.

Greeting Stephens, Finland's minister of education, Uuno Hanullah, said, "houses are burning in the immediate vicinity of the building where we are gathered. The task of halting this kind of destruction is beyond our powers.

"We are concentrating our powers on resistance at the battlefront—and doing a good job of it—but to save our homes we need help."

One Turku businessman put it more bluntly, saying "We are getting fed up with world-wide admiration; what we need is not praise but planes—pursuit planes to put these Russian bombers where they belong."

One Finnish colonel said that obtaining 100 planes "would make all the difference in the world" and that "with 300 we could halt the Bolsheviks in their tracks."

Turku has endured 33 air raids since the beginning of the war. These had caused 16 deaths and blown to ashes one-third of the homes in the city.

Today we went over the whole town and ascertained the damage. By that curious affinity which Soviet bombs have for workers' dwellings the most concentrated damage, aside from that to warehouses and similar structures of the port, was to a workers settlement on a hill at the edge of town.

It consists of small two family wooden houses owned by the workers, financed by state and municipal loans. The distrct turned in an almost solid Socialist vote, according to the labor delegate. This settlement was the first place to be bombed by Russian aviators.

It was our luck to set out on this tour of the southwestren part of Finland which has suffered so much from aerial bombardments on the bright sunshiny day when the Soviet Union chose to send over the largest group of planes yet to reach Finland.

It was officially estimated today that 500 planes yesterday dropped 3,000 bombs, killing three persons and wounding 35 others, and destroying or damaging 100 houses. On our way we saw scores of Soviet planes flying overhead, but they did not molest our party on the road and we were always somewhere else when the bombs actually fell.

Thus when we were at Hanko we learned that the Soviet flyers were then bombing Turku, and when we got to Turku and its burning buildings, we learned that Hanko was bombed while we were on the road.

We arrived at Tammisaari at noon yesterday in the midst of an air-raid alarm.

Tammisaari is a health resort town of 3,500 population on an arm of the sea. Its only industries are two small clothing factories. Yet it has an air-raid alarm almost daily and is repeatedly attacked.

Twenty of its 400 or 500 houses have been destroyed, and 100 have been rendered uninhabitable by broken windows and pierced walls, due to machine-gun fire, and similar minor damages. Its air-raid shelters are slight and most of its inhabitants scatter in the woods when Soviet planes appear. Yet only two persons have been wounded.

It is the ill fortune of Tammisaar to be on the road back from Turku and other more important places to the Soviet air bases in Estonia, whence most of the Soviet air raiding in the southwestern salient is proceeding. It appears that Soviet flyers are using Tammisaar as a dumping ground for unexpended bombs since they never land loaded with such dangerous cargo.

At Hanko the damage is overwhelming and senseless from a military viewpoint—from any but a purely terroristic viewpoint.

If Hanko had been a front-line town on a hard-fought front in the last World War, it hardly could have been more wrecked than it is. But Hanko is a bathing and health resort in summer, and just a sleeping town, hibernating in the winter, in normal times, on the southernmost tip of the Finnish mainland, more than 200 miles from the land war zone, but only 50 miles from the Soviet air bases in Estonia.

Its only industry consists of catering to the summer tourists and herring fishing. Its normal population is 8,000. Only a skeleton population remains.

Much of Hanko has been destroyed and rows of buildings, set afire on Sunday when there was a terrific raid, were still smoldering.

Soviet denials that its flyers are attacking civilian populations of Finland are not to be taken seriously. The war on the military front is a stalemate for this winter, except for such further successes as the Finns may score. The real war now is being waged against the Finnish population, and it is ruthless and indiscriminate.

Germany May Cede Pole Area For Soviet Oil

Paris Gets Report Of Possible Transfer Of Galician Fields

By Jerzy Szapiro
Copyright by New York Times

Paris, Jan. 21. — Nazi-occupied Warsaw is alarmed by rumors of the possibility of cession by the Germans to Russia of a large slice of central Poland up to the Vistula River, including even Warsaw, in return for Galician oil fields.

This news reached Polish circles here from a trustworthy Polish observer in a neutral country. He also said men in German military and party uniforms are seen in large numbers in Lwow and all over the southern and part of eastern Galicia along the Hungarian-Rumanian frontier.

This seems to confirm stories circulated in several neutral capitals that Berlin and Moscow have negotiated a rearrangement in occupied Poland whereby Stalin will cede to Hitler Galician oil fields in return for assistance in the Finnish war.

Warsaw apparently thinks this price is not high enough for the cession of this most valuable territory, giving Hitler not only oil but a common frontier with Hungary along the Carpathians and with Rumania, strengthening the Reich's power in the Danubian Valley and the Balkans.

Russia Warns Friends of Finns

Moscow (Monday), Jan. 22 (U.P.)—A sharp warning to other nations against any intervention in the Soviet-Finnish conflict was sounded last night in the presence of Josef V. Stalin and military leaders at a memorial mass meeting in the Bolshoy opera house on the sixteenth anniversary of Lenin's death.

The warning was given by Alexander Scherbakov, secretary of the Moscow Communist Party, who told would-be allies of Finland to remember what happened to foreign interventionists in the 1918 Bolshevik revolution.

British Destroyer Sunk, 81 Lost the Shetland Islands Saturday, and its crew was picked up by an unidentified steamship.

From Stockholm came the report that 17 seamen were drowned when the Flandria, 1,179 tons, from Gothenberg, en route to Amsterdam, struck two mines. The Norwegian stemship, Balzac, rescued four of the survivors, who drifted at sea for 48 hours on a raft.

Closely following the Winston Churchill speech, in which the first lord of the admiralty pointed out that neutral ships as well as British were being sunk by the Germans, it was reported that the Danish ship Tekla, 1,469 tons, had struck a mine off the northeast coast of Scotland. Nine of the crew of 18 were missing.

The Grenville was the fifth British destroyer lost since the war began. At the outbreak of hostilities, the British had 179 warships of this class.

U-Boats Under Cover

The recent falling off in the toll taken by submarines on British shipping had led to belief that the U-boats had been driven by increased vigilance and improved defenses to the less hazardous job of mine laying. At the beginning of the war submarines lurked along all trade routes. Now Royal Air Force planes of the coastal patrol cover thousands of miles of sea every day in cooperation with the navy and rarely sight one.

Until yesterday these planes had sighted submarines 166 times, and in 66 separate instances had attacked them. Such instances were becoming extremely rare in recent weeks, it was said, and in the last fortnight only two submarines had been seen by the defense forces, and one of them attacked.

A Royal Air Force official said: "We believe we have more than got them on the run. When we do sight them they dive and scuttle off. So long as they are kept below the surface there is little to worry about."

Gandhi Favors Peace With Honor On Independence

Bombay, Jan. 21 (AP).—Mohandas K. Gandhi today indicated he favored an "honorable compromise" with Britain over Indian demands for independence. Reports circulated that he had arranged a conference with the British Viceroy, Lord Linlithgow, for the first week in February.

Added importance was given to Gandhi's indication of a compromise by his order there should be no labor strikes.

Gandhi took another step toward improving India's internal situation by complimenting M. A. Jinnah, Moslem Party leader, in his newspaper.

Mr. Dewey's Porcupine

In view of the fact that it was his maiden speech on foreign affairs, Thomas E. Dewey's address on "America in a Troubled World" last Saturday was, on the whole, a praiseworthy effort. If it lacked the fire and conviction of some of his previous utterances it was, at any rate, a sober and reasonably objective statement of a problem that easily lends itself to partisan emotionalism.

Mr. Dewey made the interesting suggestion that the United States, in its relations with other countries, imitate the example of the porcupine, a heavily armored but unaggressive animal that travels in a straight line, minds his own business and "never picks a fight." But, says Mr. Dewey, "nobody ever has any doubt that he can take care of himself if anybody else starts one."

If his references to Russian-American relations are any guide, however, the New York prosecutor is not always ready to follow the example of the porcupine. Berating the Administration for recognizing Soviet Russia, he denounces the Moscow regime as one which "achieved power by assassination and maintained power by the annual murder of large numbers of its own people." It is, he says, a "perversion of government, abhorrent to the conscience of mankind."

Few Americans will take issue with him on the latter score. But in view of what he has to say on the subject it is legitimate to ask whether that porcupine he would have the United States imitate is as cool, detached and unemotional an animal as he says it is. To some his suggestions of how the porcupine should act when a bear crosses his path will not in the least appear an exercise in minding one's own business and avoiding a fight.

But all this only goes to show that, like so many of his countrymen, Mr. Dewey, while wholly opposed to entangling alliances, cannot avoid entangling emotions.

The New Yellow Peril

In recent years foreigners have been able to buy much more from us than they otherwise could have bought, by paying for goods with gold. In a certain sense gold has taken the place of the loans that we formerly made to enable foreigners to buy more goods from us than they sold to us.

In the twenties we acquired promises to pay, which in many cases proved to be worthless, in exchange for valuable goods. Today we are taking gold, which has a very uncertain value, and overvalued silver in exchange for valuable goods and claims to goods.

The extent to which our export trade depends upon our willingness to accept gold in unlimited quantities at an artificially high price is a matter deserving of serious thought. The subject is touched upon in a very illuminating discussion of "The Gold Problem Today," by Dr. E. A. Goldenweiser, director of research and statistics for the Federal Reserve Board.

Dr. Goldenweiser points out that our monetary gold stocks have increased by about $13,600,000,000 during the brief period of six years. Less than $3,000,000,000 of that huge sum represents an increase due to revaluation of gold holdings. Most of the remaining increase is due to gold imports.

From the viewpoint of those concerned with foreign trade, it is especially interesting to note that about $2,200,000,000 of our gold and silver acquisitions during the past six years have been payments for goods and services sold to foreign countries in excess of goods and services which we bought from them. In other words, our willingness to take unlimited quantities of gold has enabled foreigners to acquire our excess exports, to build up huge balances in this country and to buy American securities.

What is to be done about our gold hoard, which Dr. Goldenweiser frankly says "is of little or no use to us now"? In his opinion "an abrupt cessation of American gold purchases would create chaotic conditions in the exchange market, with repercussions on domestic business conditions and prices." No doubt his judgment on this matter is sound. But in face of a persistent gold inflow fraught with dangerous potentialities, injunctions to do nothing and hope for the best are far from reassuring.

Dr. Goldenweiser thinks that the gold we now hold, plus later acquisitions, will have few large foreign claims against it if the war is prolonged. It is also unlikely that this gold hoard will be reduced to any extent, after the war is over, by excess purchases of foreign goods and services by the United States. Rather it is more likely that heavier demands for goods and for capital will come from abroad. Hence Dr. Goldenweiser concludes that a flight of capital from the United States, which is "hard to conceive, or investment abroad which is not likely to assume large proportions, would offer the only occasion for losing gold."

It is slightly comforting to reflect that gold acquisitions have helped to stimulate domestic business by adding to the volume of our exports. But we may pay very dearly in the future for these incidental gains. And an enormous problem of credit control is created by the great volume of gold imports.

Dr. Goldenweiser explains but does not point the way out of this dilemma. "The ultimate solution," he says, "will have to be a part of the answer to much broader problems of world stability and international trade."

Helping The Child

The White House Conference on "Children in a Democracy" which has just made its report to the Nation was characterized above all else by a very generally shared desire for cooperation and speedy agreement. This unanimity, truly remarkable when experts gather in such numbers, was due not so much to a surrender of individual views as to a strong conviction that democracy is on the defensive, that its future depends on the protection of the child, and that progress in this as in other fields can only emerge out of strong, positive programs.

This impulse to compromise debatable issues by no means blinded the members of the conference to certain weaknesses in the recommendations as well as in the general trend and tone of the report. The practical-minded leaders in the field of child welfare were disappointed that not enough discussion was permitted of financial ways and means of carrying out the various provisions.

The intricacies of taxation are probably beyond the knowledge of most social workers. It was nonetheless feared that the oversimplification of the problem to which the program committee resorted when it threw the whole financial responsibility upon the Federal Government, would cause resentment and result in a dismissal by the tax-paying public of the whole report as Utopian. That the President, himself, shares this apprehension is evidenced by his warning to the conference that the United States Treasury has a bottom.

Other experienced delegates sensed an exaggeration in the dark picture of the plight of American childhood as presented in the report. A point can certainly be made that this report does not give adequate emphasis to the great progress that has been made, despite the depression, in the control of children's diseases, in the remarkable reduction of infant mortality, and in the encouraging expansion throughout the country of play facilities and education through recreational programs.

On the other hand, the poverty of the South was stressed by certain factions to a point where the Southern delegates felt a natural resentment in having their section so invidiously thrust into the limelight. Those from other communities, whose own budgets have been dangerously curtailed, could not help but wonder how their local taxpayers could take on the burden of providing for Southern children when they are obliged to make drastic economies in their own communities.

But if these fears and doubts were deeply felt and were even rather general among those attending the conference, they did not sharply emerge during the discussions. Differences were played down. The universal desire was that the Nation be made conscious of the fact that child welfare has been too greatly overshadowed in recent years by the many claims upon our attention and that it has suffered even in a financial way by the ever-growing demands upon public assistance of the old-age groups.

An exceptional tolerance was the real keynote of this large group of American citizens. This aspect of the conference augurs as well for the future of our democracy as the many excellent measures which the report embodies for the care of children.

Tax On Milk?

As a temporary means of aiding families on relief the proposal to sell them milk at 5 cents a quart seems to have much in its favor. Theoretically, it would enable many families now denied adequate milk to obtain a more balanced diet. No doubt farmers also hope that the plan will provide a larger outlet for surplus milk.

In actual practice, however, the proposed special price to be paid by families on relief would involve certain difficulties that should not be overlooked. Other communities have discovered that many of those granted the privilege of buying milk at reduced rates fail to take advantage of it because they fear that the cheaper milk is inferior. As Representative Schulte has pointed out, moreover, the plan would not ease the plight of thousands of self-supporting families with low incomes who urgently need more milk than they can now afford to buy.

Five-cent milk for relief families is presumably a substitute for general reduction of milk prices in Washington. It may be reasonably argued that the benefits of a price cut should go to the lowest-income group. But the effect of such an arrangement may not be so salutary as it first appears.

If the milk producers and distributors serving Washington can lower milk prices and still make reasonable profits, the general consumer has every reason to anticipate that adjustments will be made in his favor. If, in lieu of such general price reduction, a special price is granted families on relief, the result is to saddle part of the relief load upon milk consumers.

In effect, then, this proposed differential in milk prices is equivalent to a tax on the great majority of milk consumers for the benefit of families on relief. An undisguised tax of this sort would never win popular favor, for it would deprive some low-income families of a commodity essential to the health of children. Naturally that objection cannot be overcome by camouflaging the true nature of the proposed concession to families on relief.

Explanation First

The exchange of notes between our Government and the British Government in regard to the censoring of mails has had at least one good result. It has acquainted the public with the issues involved in the controversy and afforded the British an opportunity to explain and defend the examination of mail addressed to neutral countries.

Belligerent interference with neutral commerce in time of war inevitably occurs, and just as certainly gives rise to friction. Neutrals claim that their rights, established by international law, have been violated and belligerents almost invariably deny the charge. Since the rules of international law are subject to varying interpretations, it is usually possible for both sides to make out a very good case for their position, at least on paper. But that sort of wordy discussion does not settle anything.

The sensible attitude for neutral nations to take, therefore, when they think their rights endangered is to seek a full explanation and suspend judgment until the facts are known. The British note in reply to our protest raises a number of questions which call for open-minded discussion. The search of mailbags and the opening of letters with a neutral destination are defended on the ground that contraband ultimately destined for German use may be inclosed. It is also pointed out that stocks, bonds, securities, money orders, drafts, etc., intended for Germany, may be concealed in mail addressed to neighboring countries.

Since economic and financial pressure is regarded by the Allies as an important aid to winning the war, the British conclude they are justified in taking steps to intercept shipment of money or its equivalent to Germany. "It would be difficult," the official reply says, "to prevent the use of the letter post for the transmission of contraband to Germany, a use which has been made on an extensive scale, without submitting such mail to that very examination to which the United States Government is taking objection."

Examination of neutral mail is defended, though on much less defensible grounds, as a precaution against transmission of military intelligence to Germany. And finally it is noted that the British method of handling mails is far less annoying than the German practice of blowing up vessels which may be carrying neutral mails.

These general explanations help to clear the atmosphere, but they leave unanswered charges of unreasonably long and irritating delays in examining mail. As soon as possible, therefore, our Government should publish a statement setting forth in detail specific grievances brought to its attention. Great Britain is under obligation, at the same time, to give a fuller explanation of her actions in holding up American mails. She has already promised to examine American complaints "in as accommodating and friendly a spirit as possible."

Certainly, whatever good reasons the British may have for searching for contraband in the mails, the method may prove self-defeating if, in the long run, it results in the diminution of American friendship. When all the facts are made available Americans can be expected to take a reasonable view of the situation. But however great is the good will of the people of this Nation for the Allies, the United States cannot tolerate flagrant and unnecessary interference with our established rights.

Fruits Of Toil

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: A letter in The Post signed Dick Spurrier undertakes to defend vast private fortunes (such as that of Mr. W. Averill Harriman) on the ground that "thousands of working men would have no employment were it not for the millions put in circulation by Mr. Harriman and other men of his station."

The fallacy in this familiar argument is that it puts the cart before the horse. Labor is essential to capital, but capital is not essential to labor. Capital does not make any jobs nor create any wealth. A stack of stocks, bonds and banknotes as high as the Empire State tower would not turn a single wheel or dig a single potato or generate one more dollar of wealth.

Granted that in pioneer days invested capital was a convenient device for stimulating new enterprises, what value today in producing more goods and services when all the resources of high power salesmanship are futile, in the face of the maldistribution of income, to get rid of those already produced? It is consumption that needs financing today, not further production.

Moreover if it is only work that the working classes need, an earthquake or a volcano would be even more beneficent than a multimillionaire, for these also "make work." What the working masses need is not more toil, but a fairer and more sensible distribution of the fruits of their toil.

Mr. Spurrier argues that even if wealth were distributed it would inevitably and automatically gravitate back into a few hands. One simple method of preventing this would be to tax 100 per cent all incomes above a rational amount.

T. H. RUSSELL.
Washington, Jan. 14.

Religious Instruction

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: The columns of newspapers and the radio give ample proof that certain groups of religionists have come to the conclusion that what our American youth needs more than anything else is "religion," and that therefore religious instruction should be made a part of the school curriculum, or practically so. This is a false presumption. What American youth and what, perhaps, our people in general need is not religion but the practice of Christian principles in all walks of life and a more thorough knowledge of the greatest guide in life, the Holy Bible.

Our public school system was established upon the principle that the human mind was created free and that the public school, free to all, was not the place to teach religious dogmas. Only an intelligent citizenship can maintain a government such as ours, and that citizenship must have free minds.

If any form of religion is to be practiced, let it be in places designed for the purpose—churches or similar places—but let not our free nonsectarian public schools be used for any purpose than that for which they were intended. These schools mark the distinction between American civilization and the civilizations of countries that have no free public schools or a poor substitute for such.

Two Types Of Expenditure

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Much of the pother about the budget and most of the real and simulated fears of Federal bankruptcy would evaporate if Uncle Sam would modernize his system of public accounting.

Every great corporation, private and public, makes two types of expenditure each year—one for the purchase of capital equipment, the other for the purchase of consumption goods and services.

A private corporation finances its purchases of plant and equipment, construction, etc., in part out of depreciation allowances and in part by borrowing from banks and investors. It segregates these capital expenditures for new equipment in an investment or capital budget and puts its current consumption expenditures for materials, wages, salaries, etc., in a separate operating budget.

And it considers its budget to be in balance provided its income during the year is ample to cover not only its current operating expenditures, but also the interest and amortization charges on its bonded debt incurred in financing its capital outlays, provided also that this debt is retired before the new plant and equipment wears out. This is the approved practice of every private captain of solvency.

If the same businesslike methods of social accounting were employed by Uncle Sam, the Federal budget would present a much less alarming picture. A large part of our public expenditures during recent years has been for public works of various kinds, for self-liquidating projects, and for State enterprises that have produced socially useful assets or created utilities or utilized human and material resources more fully or yielded income to the Government.

Of the total increase in the Federal debt of around $23,000,000,000 during the past seven years, it is estimated that upward of $10,000,000,000 have been for capital expenditures of these different types.

Now if Uncle Sam were to separate these capital expenditures for public works, etc., from his current operating expenditures for wages and salaries, etc., and place the former in a capital budget as Sweden does, and if he were to place more Government functions under the administration of public corporations which have their own balance sheets, then we would have a much clearer and reassuring picture of Uncle Sam's true fiscal condition and fears of Federal bankruptcy would largely be dispelled. The truth is, as Prof. Hansen pointed out in his testimony before the TNEC last May, that the Federal budget is in fact balanced if tax revenues are ample to cover interest and amortization charges on the Federal debt.

The failure of the New Deal to effect this reform of the techniques of social accounting and to teach the people to understand this distinction between capital and consumption expenditures is largely responsible, I think, for recurrent alarms about the condition of the Federal Treasury.

As a matter of fact, since the public debt is held internally, we owe it to ourselves and the carrying charges are burdenless to the economy as a whole, for the funds raised from taxes to cover these charges are at once returned to the community in interest payments.

"No policy could be more wasteful, at a time when there are large unused resources of both capital and manpower," as Prof. Hansen has shown, "than to forego useful public outlays of a sort for which we will have something to show in the form of durable improvements and in the conservation and increased productivity of human and natural resources."

"An Idea Or Two"

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: As a constant reader of The Post, I wish to thank you for your fine and well-written editorials, which I consider at par with the best in the entire country.

I wish to express an idea or two on different matters which are now engaging the attention of the American people:

1. The Russian military operations against Finland show that Russia's military prowess has been greatly overrated. The realization of this fact will necessarily have political repercussions in Japan, China, in Central and Western Europe. When fully realized by the Russian people themselves it will militate against the present group in oligarchic control at the Kremlin.

2. The Finns are to be pitied when hordes of Russians are captured as prisoners for they will have to be fed and if there are enough Russian prisoners they could starve the Finns. Mass sponging on the Finns by the Russians as war prisoners might be more fearsome than the Russian military machine that has not clicked.

3. Japan must be grateful to Mr. Hitler for getting Joe Stalin to deflect the Russian interest from the east near Japan and the west near England; also for having unwittingly shown the world that Russia of the Soviets has not improved much as a military power over Russia of the Tsars.

4. As the British and French navies are weakened through sinkings by the German subs and mines the American Navy gains in strength, and it will be further strengthened and converted into the No. 1 Navy of the world with the new increased appropriations by Congress supported by American public opinion

5. With America asserting its rights with vigor and clarity in the Orient Japan is now convincing herself that our country is not going to tolerate violation of her rights in the Orient. The policy of considerateness on the part of our country has been understood by many Japanese as weakness or fear on the part of our Government and people. Henceforth there will be peace and amity based on better appreciation and understanding.

6. Our people are profoundly and unanimously against involvement in the European war and no so-called anti-American incidents, fabricated or otherwise, will lead our people to change their position of no mixing in European military struggles.

Best To Be Found?

To the Editor of The Post—Sir: Why all this to-do about the probability of Mr. Roosevelt running for and becoming President for the third time in succession? Who would ever be so small or set in his narrow-minded way as to think, much less say out loud, that because of tradition the country should be deprived of the services of a man so capable and willing to serve it?

Traditions are all right as long as they are good, but, if my grandfather was a horse thief I don't think that is reason enough for me to keep the practice in force to the end of time.

If Mr. Roosevelt is the best business manager the United States can find he ought to have the job until a better one is found. If the Republicans disagree about this, then they are thinking about the Republican Party and not you and me or the United States.

The Post Impressionist

Strictly Personal

That a man gets out on paper his ideas on life, people and things is no sign of imminent senility. It is merely a manifestation of egotism, for the truth is no one cares about the other fellow's ideas on anything, no matter how brilliantly expressed.

Instead of being frightened by the charge of egotism we glory in it. Nothing in the cosmos impresses us so greatly as our own ideas, a few of which are here set forth, realizing they will be completely ignored today and tomorrow.

It is our observation that people who constantly worry about security never have it anyhow. All our lives we have been attempting to avoid security. We don't want it now and we never did want it, a wish, we might add, that has been always gratified.

Security is nothing but a synonym for stagnation. Once a man of normal intelligence reaches security he begins forthwith to disintegrate. There is only one step in life after security and that is death. A man with security, in fact, is only half alive and it is difficult to distinguish between him and a mummy.

We have no more respect for women than we have for other species of the human race. The pedestal days of womanhood are gone forever, but they asked for it. They have been yapping for centuries for equality and now they don't want it. They want simultaneously to eat their cake and have it, too; a physically impossible achievement.

Women want doors opened for them, on the one hand, and the right to vote, on the other. They can't have both. Honest in our convictions and true to our code, we never open doors for women or light their cigarettes for them.

We have a violent antipathy toward people who call at our house without first telephoning us. It costs only 5 cents to give us a ring first from the corner drugstore. This habit of dropping in unannounced represents to us an unpardonable rudeness, a certain barbaric crudity. This aversion is partially explained by the fact that we spend three-fourths of our time in bed, reading, writing and telephoning, and we don't like to be diverted from these labors by sudden and unannounced intrusions.

If we owned a newspaper, which, of course, we never shall, we would first drop the society page. The society page not only bores us stiff, but we see no reason for recording the goings and comings of the upper crust. The lower crust, of which we have been a lifelong member, is infinitely more interesting and worthy of recognition.

A man's wisdom increases in proportion to the realization of his ignorance. According to this bit of sound reasoning, we are the most intelligent person of our acquaintance. No one is more keenly aware of his innate stupidity than we are.

A man or woman who does something different in this republic, talks differently or writes differently than the common herd, is considered nuts. A person, for example, honest enough to admit he or she despises a job from 9 until 5 is said to be "screwy." We possess a great fondness for screwy people. At least they are interesting.

We have little time for persons who appear to be on the verge of a collapse during a concert, a bit of quackery designed to show the world their appreciation of music. The genuine music lover makes no outward manifestation of his feelings. The spine-tingling thrill of music is something akin to taking a bath. It is a purely personal matter and not one to be broadcast to bystanders.

Nor have we much patience with that well-meaning gentry who insist on informing us of the name, date and composer of a piece of music when it is being played. We are not interested in these revelations. We are interested only in the music and it makes no difference to us whether it is the product of Chopin or a numbers runner.

The author and title of the music add or substract nothing from its quality as far as we are concerned. For this reason our taste in music is catholic. The general public apparently attaches more importance to the name of the author than to the music itself, a fact which supports our conviction that the American people have little collective appreciation of fine music.

Which recalls to mind a Latin professor we had in our youth. He spent 8½ months telling us what sort of clothes the Romans wore, forgetting all the while we were there to learn Latin and not styles. The result was we did not get past the first conjugation, and we had to repeat the whole year's work the following term.

Women with intellect strike us as a distortion. Perhaps they frighten us and make us feel inferior. Anyhow, we don't associate femininity with mind. There is nothing so pathetic as a woman pleading a case in court, directing a sales organization or engaging in other sordid activities of the commercial world historically reserved for the male. We are, we suppose, incurably romantic.

Minority Rights

IT REALLY does no good to argue with those who are devoted to the C. I. O., because they start from the premise that majority rule cancels minority rights and that organized labor must engage in politics. Anyone who does not concede these things as a beginning is a Fascist.

But I hold that even a standpat or reactionary Republican has rights and that if he is forced to join a C. I. O. union he ought not be compelled to contribute the tiniest fraction of his union dues to the support of the Democratic ticket. He should not be forced even to lend that much money for that purpose. That means that the C. I. O. has no right to give or lend any money to any political party or movement unless there is entire unanimity in the whole organization. It means, further, that the C. I. O. and its component unions have no right to indorse the New Deal, for example, or the ham 'n' eggs plan or the Spanish Loyalists cause, the indorsement of which did cause serious trouble in the Newspaper Guild, as long as there is a single dissenting vote.

Minority Rights Are Overruled

ANYONE WHO maintains the right of the C. I. O. or any component union to indorse any of these things by majority vote places no limit on the variety of things that may be indorsed in this way. The majority could indorse atheism, for example, or free love, and contribute to campaign funds for these purposes, in which case dissenters would have to choose between losing their right to work and the sacrifice of their principles. The majority could indorse the Communist ticket and contribute to the Communist campaign fund, thus forcing dissenters to support a movement which they held to be traitorous. The C. I. O. has no right to declare for or against propositions which are matters of morals or religious or partisan faith while insisting on the right to compel people to join its ranks. If membership were optional the sky would be the limit. The majority then could indorse to their hearts' content and give the entire union treasury to any cause favored by 51 per cent of the members. The minority could get out.

Every man should be free to dissociate himself from any organization which is striving for aims that violate his conscience. But membership is not optional. Thus thousands of Americans are compelled to join in order to obtain or hold jobs, and the C. I. O. would force them to contribute their membership in an organization at war with their beliefs.

Members Forced Into Partisan Politics

IT ISN'T necessary for the C. I. O. to take this position at all. It could go back to its original and only legitimate purposes, but it seems very unlikely that it ever will, because the zealots in the movement, not all of whom are Communists, by their very zeal control the policies.

It is a political movement, if not yet a party, which claims and, with the help of the National Government, enforces a legal right to compel citizens to join and pay or suffer economic ostracism. In other words, the Government, by authority of the Wagner act and the Labor Board, conscripts citizens into a political movement and makes them pay a tax to a private organization.

It takes no lawyer to realize that the first compulsion, the requirement that a citizen join a private organization, is wrong and a violation of the right of the individual. The Government has no more right to force a man to join a union and pay taxes to it than it has to require him to join the Elks, Moose, Epworth League, B'nai B'rith, Ancient Order of Hibernians or the Sons and Daughters of I Will Arise. Far from guaranteeing the union's coercive power, the Government should defend more vigorously the right of the individual citizen not to join any organization except, in certain dire circumstances, the armed forces of the United States.

Government Control Is Poor Alternative

THAT IS the simplest and only honest solution of a question that causes almost homicidal wrangles between men. The next best solution, paradoxically, is much worse. That alternative is to use Government authority to prevent unions from engaging in political activity or mixing commitments and contributions outside the narrow, legitimate range of union aims. . .

The C. I. O. would call this a Fascist argument, but I submit that the C. I. O. is much more Fascistic or, if you will, Communistic, there being no difference between one and the other.

An Era Ends With Borah

THE NATION mourns the death of Senator Borah with an intimate grief seldom felt at the passing of any public figure.

Washington without Borah will be like Washington without the Lincoln Memorial.

For thirty-two years he has been Senator from Idaho. Seven Presidents have come and six have passed while he remained unshaken on Capitol Hill. Peace and war and peace again; boom, depression and level waters; corruption high, wide and flamboyant; reform and reaction and reaction and reform—the waves have risen and receded and left the Senator unmoved.

THIS IS A curious career for "the most inconsistent of Senators," for "the most unpredictable figure in American politics".

The truth is that this description falls wide of the mark. Senator Borah was unpredictable only if the mind of America is unpredictable, or, more precisely, the mind of that America that lives outside our few great metropolises and is most clearly formed in the central part of the continent—between the Appalachians and the Rockies. Senator Borah was that mind.

He was the most representative American of his age—the most representative American man.

His faith, his convictions, his idols and his prejudices were the faith, convictions, idols and prejudices of Main Street, U. S. A.

Faith In The U. S. And In Main Street

HE HAD FAITH in the United States and in Main Street. He believed in the Constitution of the United States as firmly as if its pages had been written on stone and handed to a chosen people by God, and he regarded himself as a high priest of the Ark of the Covenant.

He believed in the people, and he gauged the will of the people by the largest economic class—the families with incomes between $1,000 and $4,000 a year.

He distrusted foreigners and foreign nations. He hated war. He was suspicious of big business and of Wall Street. He disliked the very rich and was sorry for the very poor, and believed neither of them was representative.

He believed passionately in national independence and in personal independence. He hated to take orders, and never followed a "party line"—while he also never deserted his party. He had in him a strong Puritan streak and a gift for oratory.

He was, therefore, never merely the Senator from Idaho. He was Senator of the United States of America.

Ancestry Typical Of American Stock

HE CAME OF THE most representative American racial stock—mixed European stock—predominantly Bohemian and Irish, assimilated to a form neither Bohemian nor Irish but immediately recognizable as American.

He had an education as typically American as pumpkin pie, store cheese and Huckleberry Finn. He went to public school in Tom's Prairie—a name that might have been invented by Sinclair Lewis—then to a fresh water college, then to the University of Kansas. He quit before graduation and studied law—in a law office. He moved West looking for opportunity and got off at Boise, Idaho, for no particular reason. He grew up with the town and made a career.

He spoke American, as Americans speak it in conversation and as they spoke it in oratory as long as the basic education in language in this country was founded on the English classics and the Bible.

And he looked the way Americans wish they looked, and seldom do. He was handsome, without a trace of prettiness; rugged, without a trace of toughness; an unforgettable face and head, lionlike—but without ferocity, the rugged chin mitigated by its deep cleft.

Lone Course Always Beckoned To Him

SO THE SENATOR pursued his "lone course" by simply walking alone down the Main Street of the Nation, taller, better looking, more gifted and better educated than the others on the street, but not too much taller or too much wiser; a man they could look up to, but never a man who ran too far ahead; not a man to take history by the shoulders and turn it in another direction; not a man to create a new following; not a maker of history in the sensational sense. Representative, shrewd, skeptical, idealistic, humorous, and with just a touch of the crank, without which no one is quite representative of this Nation; believing in free silver and prohibition; lagging stubbornly when the Nation went whooping to war, and still standing where they had left him when they came back rather sheepishly.

Everybody has disagreed with the Senator on one issue or another—but Americans disagreed with him the way they disagree with one another on cracker barrels in every country store from Maine to Oregon and in every smoking car and bus. He bolted party discipline the way millions of Americans bolt it at every election.

But, no matter how he bolted, he was never an outsider. He was the greatest American insider. He swayed to breezes the way a tree sways—with roots 10 feet in the ground.

The news of his death hits home. It is like reading that an era is over.

This is addressed to people who know Patrick Foley, 40, of 2115 F street northwest.

The Foley you know is not the Foley who was arrested Tuesday for disorderly conduct after he voluntarily entered a patrol wagon. This Foley you do not know was arraigned before Police Judge Walter J. Casey Thursday.

"I can explain to the people I know that I wasn't arrested," Patrick Foley said yesterday. "But when somebody comes up and says someone I don't even know has told them about my arrest it's too much."

U. S. Has Creed But No Faith, Says Judge Allen

Baltimore, Jan. 21 (AP).—Federal Judge Florence E. Allen, of Ohio, asserted yesterday American traditions of freedom can never "function to the fullest" until they are written "as articles of faith in the hearts of the people."

Politically, she told the Women's Bar Association of Baltimore, "The American people are as a church which has a creed, but no faith."

"The political philosophy has not yet been constructed which enables that constitution to be the living essence of our Government."

The first amendment to the Constitution, Judge Allen said, guaranteed "freedom of inquiry," but it "has not been put to work extensively."

Delicate Diplomacy

By Ernest K. Lindley

Japan—What Do We Do Next?

ON FRIDAY our commercial treaty with Japan expires. Next week probably the Senate Foreign Relations Committee will take up Senator Pittman's resolution empowering the President to restrict or prohibit the export to Japan not only of arms, ammunition and implements of war, but of iron, steel, oil, gasoline, scrap-iron, scrap-steel and other scrap-metal. It may also toy with Senator Schwellenbach's resolution permitting the President to embargo the export of any or all commodities except agricultural products.

There is doubt, I think, that the President would like to have the authority which the Pittman resolution would confer. Probably he would still like to have the much broader power contained in the Schwellenbach resolution.

At present, however, it seems unlikely that the Pittman resolution will be adopted or that the Schwellenbach resolution will even be seriously considered.

In the first place, the Senate, in its present temper, probably would not approve the Pittman resolution. New developments in the Far East, especially any kind of incident resembling the sinking of the Panay, might muster the necessary votes in the Senate. Perhaps, with extreme pressure, they could be mustered now. But an attempt to push the Pittman resolution at present almost certainly would strengthen the determination of the isolationists to have the Senate declare that a state of war exists in the Far East, thereby putting into effect the neutrality act.

President Eager To Avoid Controversy

THE NEUTRALITY ACT would prohibit exports of arms, munition and implements of war to China. It would not prohibit the export of oil, steel, iron and other essential war materials other than actual arms, ammunition and implements of war to Japan. The Japanese manufacture most of their own munitions, the Chinese cannot. The Administration would rather leave things as they are than have the neutrality act clapped on the Sino-Japanese war.

In the second place, the President is eager to avoid controversy over foreign policy, and especially to clear himself of all suspicions that he wants to pursue policies which might lead us to war. His present attitude was shown in his extraordinarily cautious letter on aid to Finland.

In the third place, there is some feeling in the Administration that even if the Pittman resolution could be put through without a fight this is not the time to pass it. This is a question of tactics. The argument is that the psychological effect in Japan of discussing the Pittman bill and then laying it aside, but within easy reach, may be just as beneficial as actually passing it. The actual passage would be held in reserve for use at a time when it again seems desirable to express our disapproval.

Treaty Lapse Not To See Quick Action

IT LOOKS, therefore, as if the lapse of the commercial treaty would not be followed by any sudden or broad action on our part. Within the Government there are—as there have been right along—differences of opinion as to how we should deal with the Japanese. But there seems to be substantial agreement that this is not the time either for negotiations looking to a friendly settlement in the Far East, or for the sudden application of heavy pressure on Japan.

The most that the advocates of a "strong" or "forward" policy seem to favor is what might be called "step by step" sanctions. When the Japanese do something we don't like, we would do something specific to show that we noticed it. We might embargo the export of iron. Another incident might bring another step in retaliation. From time to time we would despatch another destroyer or a few more submarines to Manila.

Meanwhile we would maintain a friendly front. We would try to avoid such pressure as to force the Japanese into the arms of Russia. The "strong" policy advocates generally deride the notion that the Japs and the Russians could get together. They may be right, but the recollection is fresh here of the experts who said that the Germans and the Russians could never get together.

Entering a Period Of Delicate Diplomacy

THE ADVOCATES of a more moderate policy would try to give more positive encouragement to the "liberal" forces in Japan. At least some of them favor opening negotiations now for a new commercial treaty. The negotiations would be protracted and almost certainly would not be concluded except in connection with a settlement in the Far East. But, it is argued, an indication of our willingness to negotiate would strengthen the "liberal" elements and prevent the extreme militarists from convincing the Japanese people that we are determined to destroy Japan.

Whether the advocates of a strong policy or their more cautious colleagues prevail, we are entering upon a period of delicate diplomacy in the Far East.

Invitation To War

By Barnet Nover

Churchill's Bid To The Neutrals

PITY THE POOR neutrals on the edge of Europe's cockpit. They get it coming and going.

With the sole possible exception of Italy, none of them is deriving any profits out of this war as some of them did out of the last. On the contrary, they have discovered that neutrality can be terrifically expensive. The war has disrupted their economies, hampered their trade, reduced them to ration cards just as though they were belligerents.

They have had to keep large numbers of men continuously under arms. They have had to spend vast sums in hastily building up their defenses. They have suffered in silence while their ships have been mined and torpedoed; in fact, the losses in merchant shipping of Europe's neutrals have been proportionately greater than those of Great Britain. Bullied by Germany they have, at the same time, been squeezed by the Allies.

BAD AS THEIR plight, the Dutch, the Belgians, the Swedes, the Swiss, the Norwegians and the other small neutrals would not mind it so much if they could feel sure that their sacrifices would not be in vain.

Unfortunately, that is one thing they cannot be sure about. Neutral today, they want to remain neutral indefinitely. But in spite of their hopes and desires and, in some cases, the habits of a century, they may tomorrow find themselves at war. They know what happened to Finland.

Europe's traditional neutrals, therefore, are like the inhabitants of houses on the edge of a great conflagration. They want their homes and hearths to be spared the ravages of the holocaust. They are prepared, as a safety measure, to wet down their roofs so that the sparks may be put out when it reaches them. But the fire raging in their vicinity may prove too fierce to control.

WINSTON CHURCHILL'S radio address of last Saturday will add nothing to their peace of mind. It was an invitation to join a war they want no part of. And they fear it may prove an invitation to disaster.

The point is, of course, that the Allies have little to lose, much to gain, if the neutrals could be persuaded or forced into the war. It would mean the diffusion of Germany's war activities over a wider area, the multiplication of her enemies. Churchill may thus be entirely right in saying that if the neutrals joined the Allies the chance of the war being brought to a speedy end would be heightened.

THE NEUTRALS are also aware that Britain's first lord of the admiralty was conjuring up no figment of a Machiavellian imagination when he predicted that the "storm will not pass" but will rage and roar "ever more loudly, ever more widely." Each of them must consider, therefore, the dour possibility that it will be the next victim of aggression. None of them can even for a moment assume that it is safe.

Yet Churchill is much too wise not to realize that in asking the neutrals to join with Great Britain and France he was asking the impossible. The past may be an open book; the future is an impenetrable veil. However dangerous the plight of Europe's neutrals may be, the fact remains that if the war spreads in their direction the impact upon them will be far more disastrous than it has so far proved to be in the case of the major European powers.

GERMANY has held off bombing British or French towns or even hurling her legions against the Maginot Line. The Allies have shown equal forbearance. But if the war spreads, say, to The Netherlands and Belgium, it will be no sit-down war that the Dutch and Belgians will be faced with but more of the Blitzkrieg type whose grim consequences are made visible in the ruins of Warsaw.

Thus, as long as there is the slightest measure of hope of remaining at peace, Europe's neutrals will hug that hope to their bosoms. Churchill's barbed shaft is full of pertinence: "Each one hopes that if he feeds the crocodile enough, the crocodile will eat him last. All of them hope that the storm will pass before their turn comes to be devoured." And yet if there is any possibility that one may be left undevoured the desire to remain neutral will remain dominant in those small and highly civilized nations.

NOBODY KNOWS this better than Winston Churchill. Why, then, did he issue that most unwelcome invitation to the neutrals to make the Allies' cause their own?

It is possible, but not probable, that he spoke merely for rhetorical effect, to emphasize the advantages of belligerency over neutrality, to lure the little nations on by the promise of a short war to end prolonged and painful uncertainty. Yet he could hardly have entertained the belief that such a speech would make friends for the Allies in the Netherlands and Belgium, in Norway and Sweden. If anything, it is likely to antagonize them.

What, then, was Churchill after? Was it merely to pose an issue which becomes daily sharper in the Europe of 1940—the division of Europe between the aggressors, on the one hand, and their actual and potential victims on the other?

Or was he merely playing a long shot? For even if Churchill's bid is, as it is likely to be, immediately and unequivocally rejected by spokesmen of the small European neutrals, it may give Germany a pretext to justify that aggression against the Low Countries or Sweden or Switzerland which has long been feared.

The answer to this question may soon be forthcoming—in Berlin.

Holmes Assails Soviet 'Sell Out' Of Liberal Move

Copyright by New York Times

New York, Jan. 21.—Declaring he had not only been "deceived but sold out" by Russia in its alliance with Germany and war upon Finland, John Haynes Holmes discussed "Why Liberals Went Wrong On the Russian Revolution" in a sermon today before the congregation of the Community Church in Town here.

"I am sick over this business, as though I saw my father drunk, or my daughter on the street," said Holmes. "And all the more, since I feel that I have deceived myself as well as been deceived."

"If we liberals were right on certain single aspects of the Russian revolution, we were wrong, disgracefully wrong, on the question as a whole."

Anderson's 'Key Largo' Brings Muni to Capital

Star's Film Contract Shortens Run; Notables in Town for 'Lincoln' Premiere; This, That and the Other About the Theater

ALTHOUGH the Playwrights' Company's production of Maxwell Anderson's latest play, "Key Largo," starring Paul Muni, has seemed to have been omitted from the list of notable bookings local theatergoers might anticipate for the current season, it now appears that the Capital will see this widely heralded offering, after all.

Faced with the loss of the services of Mr. Muni, who must report in Hollywood June 1 to begin work on his motion picture portrait of the great composer, Beethoven, the Playwrights Company has decided to curtail the New York run of "Key Largo" in order to permit other large cities to see him in his first stage role in more than seven years.

BELL

Accordingly, the Anderson drama will terminate its Broadway engagement on Saturday, February 24, and on the following Monday, February 26, will begin a 14-week transcontinental tour with a fortnight in Philadelphia, followed by a week each in Washington—that would mean the National Theater—Pittsburgh, Detroit and St. Louis and three weeks in Chicago. Briefer pauses will be made at Des Moines, Omaha and Kansas City before proceeding to a two-week stand in San Francisco and a final two weeks in the Biltmore Theater in Los Angeles, where the tour will end on Saturday, June 1, a scant 5 miles from the Warner Brother Studio, where Mr. Muni is articled.

"Key Largo" ranks among the outstanding successes of the Playwrights Company. Somewhat to Washington's disappointment, it opened in Indianapolis on October 30, gathered momentum during visits to Columbus, Cleveland, Buffalo and Boston, and following its Broadway premiere took its place among the season's successes. By certain astute judges of dramatic values, the Anderson play has been acclaimed the best of 1939 and Mr. Muni's performance in it the finest during the same period.

Both Paul Muni and the Playwrights are hoping that their auspicious association may be renewed next season, with the star appearing in a work by S. N. Behrman, Elmer Rice or Robert E. Sherwood. We hope so, too—and that Washington may be the first to see it.

Mention of Robert E. Sherwood necessarily brings up the important item of the world premiere of the film version of his Pulitzer Prize play, "Abe Lincoln in Illinois," at RKO-Keith's Theater tonight at 8:30, under the sponsorship of the Newspaper Women's Club. The gathering of notables for this distinguished event by now should be complete. Director John Cromwell, who also appears in the role of John Brown in Mr. Sherwood's own adaptation of his stage play, and Ruth Gordon, who plays the role of Mary Todd Lincoln, both arrived in town on Friday. On Saturday, S. Barrett McCormick, director of advertising and publicity for RKO-Radio Pictures and one of the general factotums of tonight's gala goings-on, put in his appearance and yesterday Raymond Massey, tar of both the stage play and the film; Mr. Sherwood and Mary Howard, the Ann Rutledge of the picture, arrived in time to join the group of dinner guests at the White House last night. Producer Max Gordon and members of the New York press also will be among those present at tonight's premiere, which will be attended by one of the plushiest audiences in the history of the theater in Washington.

It is important to local theatergoers to know that RKO-Keith's Theater will be closed to the public all day today, in preparation for the single, reserved-seat, premiere presentation of "Abe Lincoln in Illinois" tonight. "Green Hell" terminated its run on Fifteenth street last night. The box-office, of course, will remain open throughout the day for the sale of the few remaining tickets for the premiere, as well as for the regular "all-day grind" engagement beginning tomorrow morning. On and after tomorrow, January 23, the picture will be shown five times daily. Morning and afternoon performances are unreserved; all night performances, all seats reserved.

Edward G. Robinson, versatile Warner Brothers motion picture star and a stage actor of highest rank, has accepted the invitation of the entertainment committee, under the chairmanship of Andrew R. Kelley, to join the galaxy of stars who will attend the President's Birthday celebrations in Washington on January 30. In addition to his personal appearances at all of the seven hotels in which birthday balls will be held, Mr. Robinson will take part in both of the special midnight shows, beginning at 11:30 p. m., at the Earle and Capitol theaters. From the Capital, Mr. Robinson will proceed to New York to be present at the premiere of his latest picture, "The Magic Bullet," in which he portrays the great scientist, Dr. Paul Ehrlich. Among his recent pictures have been "The Amazing Dr. Clitterhouse," "I Am the Law," "Blackmail" and "Confessions of a Nazi Spy."

There seems to be a slight divergence of lay opinion as to which is the most popular male screen star of 1939. One recent newspaper canvass corroborated an earlier poll of motion picture exhibitors by returning Mickey Rooney in the top spot. Another, conducted from Kansas City, Mo., by Associated Publications, had Spencer Tracy in first place, Clark Gable second and Mickey Rooney third. There is greater unanimity in the matter of the top-ranking feminine star. All three accorded that honor to Bette Davis by preponderant majorities.

The gender of Baby Sandy, filmdom's No. 1 baby star, ought to be settled once and for all by her next picture. Late this month, Baby Sandy—whose real name is Sandra—will go before the cameras at Universal in an item called "Sandy Is a Lady," based on an original screen play by Charles Grayson. "Sandy," who made her film debut a year ago as a baby boy with Bing Crosby in "East Side of Heaven"—and forthwith proceeded to "steal the show"—celebrated her second birthday on January 14.

The picture will be shown on F street in the near future

'Thin Man' Moves Along To Columbia

For a razzle-dazzle of gunplay, gun molls, babies' birthday parties, Cuban night clubs and swimming pools that catch on fire, let us commend you to "Another Thin Man," now on view at Loew's Columbia. This engaging parade of fun and trouble may not be so terribly hot as a motion picture opus, but it's plenty hot-cha.

Myrna Loy and William Powell in their Mr. and Missus Nick Charles moods are about the happiest and darnedest of ostensibly married screen pairs. They have excitement, gangster friends, millionaire friends, a baby, plenty of Scotch, enough money, night clubbing, a happy domestic life and a murder a day to keep Nick's talents occupied.

This latest "Thin Man" adventure winds around a New York millionaire who made wrong money the easy way, but let his accomplices take it the hard way. When the chief accomplice gets out of the clink, he's dead ripe for revenge and full of malicious plans. At this auspicious moment Mr. and Mrs. Nick Charles choose to spend a week-end with the millionaire. It is a week-end to stop all week-ends. Nic Charles, jr., is nearly kidnaped, Nick, sr., has knives, bullets and fists tossed at him, Mrs. Nick gets tangled up with a gigolo in a Cuban night club, Asta is chased by a ferocious Irish wolfhound and nearly makes friends with a kitten with a white stripe down its back. The millionaire has his throat cut, his chief enemy is shot off a hotel balcony, a perfectly harmless guy is shot by police, a gangster's girl and gambler fight like a couple of alley cats. Yes, it's a classic week-end.

A Technicolor trip through Venezuela is not particularly inspiring but pleasantly tropical. Tennis champs star in a sports short. The newsreel completes the bill.

MARY HARRIS.

The New Yorker

By Leonard Lyons

New York, Jan. 21.

A. M. A.: That Suydenham Hospital mess, which was front-paged last week, has recurred. Dr. J. Jarcho, who was made head of the hospital by Gustavus Rogers, resigned after a long talk with Dr. Ralph Colp of the American College of Surgeons . . . Jim Farley: Mrs. Roark Bradford is going to Washington to work for the Women's Democratic National Committee until convention time . . . Marian Anderson: The Beethoven Association's dinner for Koussevitzky, which was to be held at the swanky Cosmopolitan Club, has been shifted to the Brevoort. Dorothy Maynor will be the honored soloist . . . J. Edgar Hoover: Newspaper men who were in Barcelona in 1934 say they remember that one of the 17 men who've been arrested for seditious conspiracy was held on a morals charge there.

HARPER'S: At the benefit auction for exiled writers last Sunday George Biddle, whose autobiography, "An American Artist's Story," is a best seller, met Louis Untermeyer, whose autobiography "From Another World," also is a best seller . . . Each admitted having read the first chapter of the other's book . . . Arthur Kober explained it later: both chapters appeared recently in the same issue of Harper's magazine.

BEN BERNIE: Al Jolson is flying to New York from Florida to work your radio show while you're in the hospital . . . Emily Post: When Monty Woolley felt that the guests at his Ritz-Carlton cocktail party for Cole Porter were staying too late he donned a bathrobe, got into a wheelchair, ordered he lights put out and—holding a candle in his hand—was wheeled through the room, bidding everyone "goodnight, goodnight" . . . Gene Autry: Mrs. Jock Whitney is in Florida, now selecting the horses she'll ride in the Republic movie she'll make with you.

MAYOR LAGUARDIA: If you were surprised at Sam Goldwyn's broadcast-without-error when you presented him with the Film Critics Circle Prize, this is the reason: Goldwyn rehearsed his speech in his hotel room, but kept repeating two mistakes. He called Geraldine Fitzgerald "Geraldine Farrar" and Flora Robson was "May Robson" . . . His aides were frantic, and when they finally came to the Rainbow Room they took him to a private room before he was to meet you. They wondered how they would get him to try it again. "It's all right," Goldwyn assured them. "You mean you want me to rehearse? Sure; I'll do it. I always make my actors rehearse. So me, too."

ELSA MAXWELL: Frederick Lonsdale is the only snuff user in the New York night clubs. He says he hasn't had a cold since he started using snuff . . . Walt Disney: The first sale of tickets for "Pinocchio" was made yesterday. Sixteen seats were sold to Mrs. Irving Berlin . . . Thurman Arnold: Herbert Hoover doesn't believe that the antitrust laws should apply to labor unions . . . Will Hays: In connection with the Lillian Russell movie which Hollywood is screening, M. L. Werner, the biographer, was advised to call his new book about her "The Life and Times of Lillian Russell" . . . "It's no good," Werner said. "She only had times."

MAX STEUER: If you think you're having a difficult time breaking the contract your client, Sam Goldwyn, has with United Artists, blame Goldwyn for it . . . When the contract, which expires in 1945, was about to be signed, Sam instructed his attorney to draw a contract which no lawyer in the world would be able to break. "Because," he stated at the time, "United Artists some day might want to throw me out."

F. D. R.: There may be some obstacles here concerning your Birthday Ball in New York—because the Theater Authority insists upon the usual percentage . . . John Houseman: Now that his RKO deal has been terminated by mutual consent, Orson Welles will remain there for a while, in case they need him to direct a picture . . . Earl Carroll: Henry Youngman is flying to Hollywood to join your show there . . . Ambassador Potocki: The Polish Restaurant, which is a relief project for your country's refugees, has broken the jinx at 151 East Fifty-seventh street. Eleven night clubs operated at that spot—and all of them flopped.

Atlas

Ka-Ni Lane and his "Sunset Islanders, headliners of the stage bill which opened yesterday afternoon at the Atlas Theater to run through Tuesday, enthralled the packed house with the enchanting melodies and native dances of Hawaii. Alexianne and boys, seven versatile youngsters, who rate high on a varied stage festival, conculse the audience with their rib-tickling antics and unique presentation. Last, but not least, "Pryde and Dell," novelty juggling artists, thrill with their deftness and speed.

A double-feature screen program, comprised of the dead end kids in "Call a Messenger," and Claire Trevor in "Allegheny Uprising," will augment the stage acts today and tomorrow.

Close-Ups and Long-Shots Of the Motion Picture Scene

Hollywood, Jan. 21 (INS).—The most exciting news I've heard since I came home is that Richard Greene will lead Virginia Field to the altar in two months. He has already bought her a home. You know, if I were a mystery writer instead of a movie scribe, I would try to unravel the strange case of Richard Greene, one of the interesting problems of the hour. Frankly, I was amazed to discover his enormous popularity on my recent tour. It was a surprise because Hollywood looks on Richard as just another good looking leading man. The fans, particularly young girls, go into ecstasies over him. If I received 5,000.

LOUELLA PARSONS

I think Richard proves that femme audiences do not change as much from generation to generation as Hollywood believes. He is today leading "matinee idol," taking the place once held by Maurice Costello, Wallace Reid and Francis X. Bushman. In his next picture he is scheduled to play a handsome hero in "Maryland," a sequel to "Kentucky" and it will be interesting to see how it fares at the box office, for Greene is undeniably the "man of the hour" among the debutantes.

Snapshots of Hollywood collected at random: Una Merkel, who was sicker than anyone knew, is back from the hospital, much improved, I am glad to say; John Swope flew in from New York and the reason is Katherine Aldridge; George Montgomery, a "beeg cowboy" from the West, has his eye on Judith Woodbury, Earl Carroll beauty; the King Kennedys asked a few friends in to meet their house guest, Charles Maurice. Saw June Clyde, one of our glamour girls of 10 years ago, and T. Freeland, who are rejoicing that after nine years of marriage the stork is expected; Miriam Seegar, another star of yesterday, was there with her husband, Tim Whelan. All four came back from England when war was declared; T. Netcher wired from Chicago that the Pump Room at the Ambassador looked like Hollywood and Vine. Lunching there, he said, were Constance Bennett, Joe Schenck, Jack Paley, Anita Louise, Francis Farmer, Ria Gable, Raymond Massey, Clifton Webb, Charles Butterworth and, of course, T.

Mickey Rooney is the guest star Tuesday night at the La Conga, according to Lloyd Pantages, who is doing a very good job there as master of ceremonies; Don Ameche has bought the Al Jolson ranch in the valley; Claire Windsor, Chester Conklin, Betty Compson, Bryant Washburn, Kenneth Harlan are the old-timers who have been chosen as guests of honor at the Victor Hugo Sunday night; Kay Griffith and John Howard, who battle consistently, which is probably a sign they are really in love, skating together at the Tropical Ice Gardens, all made up; Rosie and Irving Netcher hosting a farewell party at the Hollywood Derby. They are sailing for Honolulu; Eloise and Pat O'Brien celebrate their ninth wedding anniversary on the train speeding to New York. Pat's gift to her beautiful ruby clips and matching earrings.

That's all for today. See you tomorrow.

In Hollywood

With Hedda Hopper

Hollywood, Jan. 21.

Some people who have an overdose of holiday, family duties, love in a palace or cottage, well, anyway—when they need a vacation, go to the mountains, sea, snowbanks or take an ocean voyage. When I need a rest I go out and get a job and spend a couple of days in a motion picture studio, acting. Must be the ham in me, 'cause I can get up at 6 o'clock in the morning, work like a Trojan, see lots of my pals, reminisce about old times, come home and whip out to three parties. That's what I did the other day after working in "The Woman From Hell," which is a very powerful story by J. Edgar Hoover. And I have a hunch based on the life of that famous character, Mr. Barker. And what a character, with an acting plum, and Blanche Yurka, who's played everything from Shakespeare to Greek tragedy, had to go out on the back lot and learn to shoot it out with the property boys before she started to act in the picture. It will definitely make her a star. It's got everything, and she's giving it everything she's got. Her experience in the movies has been anything but quiet. She learned to knit for "A Tale of Two Cities," when she played the fiendish Mme. Defarge, and in this, her second, learned all about firearms, and gets shot at the end, and deserved it.

HOPPER

Director Jimmy Hogan told about going to Ireland to see his father's (as he described it) beautiful, rambling farm. Said it was so tiny you couldn't have built a good doghouse on it. We started to reminisce about a picture we did years ago with Jan Kipuera and Gladys Swarthout. Jan wouldn't allow anybody to smoke on the set—signs were posted everywhere. Even Lubitsch, who was head of the studio, was asked to leave his cigar outside. Bing Crosby strolled in puffing a pipe and got the dirtiest look in his life. To get even, we had ten days' of fishing scenes down at Laguna, and usually they replenish the fish at least every other day. But not for Mr. Kipuera's. He was so fed up with fish he's never been able to look a sucker in the face since. Nor have I!

Parties Keep Capital Notables on the Go

Robert E. Lee Escorts Ann Rutledge (Mary Howard) and Abe Lincoln (Raymond Massey) From Station Here

From one o'clock yesterday afternoon, Washington society was kept on the jump trying to cover several large and gay parties.

There was the tea given by Gen. and Mrs. Albert Cox in honor of Miss Mary Howard, who plays the part of Ann Rutledge in "Abe Lincoln in Illinois;" the luncheon at which Miss Nancy Leiter and James Mitchell were joint hosts; the cocktail party at which Mrs. Frank Roberts Mead, of Hartford, Conn., was honored by her sister, Mrs. S. Kent Legare.

Pretty Miss Howard, who is week-ending here with her sister, Miss Meredith Howard, had never seen the completed film until last evening, when, by request of the President, it was run off at the White House. The Raymond Masseys—he plays "Abe"—and Miss Howard, were dinner guests of the Roosevelts last night before the showing, so the latter left the Cox party promptly at 7:30.

The First Lady will attend the premiere of the picture tonight. The performance is under the auspices of the Newspaper Women's Club, which will use the proceeds for the bed it maintains at Children's Hospital and for its own Fellowship Fund.

Miss Howard's Mother Helps Receive

Miss Howard, a slender brunette, received with the hosts and her mother, Mrs. Charlotte Howard, while her sister wandered about. The actress wore a floor-length frock of shirred chiffon in an orange shade, with a clip of brilliants at the tailored neck. Her sister, who is equally pretty, and is engaged in radio work here, had chosen a gold lame with a matching turban and a corsage of orchids. Mrs. Cox was in a long gown of turquoise crepe with a rhinestone pin at the neck.

The Cox home on Massachusetts avenue was lit by candles, particularly effective with the walls of the dining and drawing rooms tinted a pale green and the floor-length curtains of heavy red damask. Vases of lilies and roses were everywhere, and the hot beaten biscuits and sandwiches, served with champagne punch, were extra good.

Miss Howard amused friends by saying how one of the policemen of the motorcycle escort which met her at the train here was named Robert E. Lee. He seemed to think it was very funny that his next assignment was to go get "Abe Lincoln."

The hosts were assisted yesterday by their daughters, Mrs. Murray Borden and Miss Frances Cox, and by Mrs. Louis Sutton and Miss Sarah Sutton, of Raleigh, N. C., and Elizabeth Bailey, daughter of Senator Bailey. Albert Cox, jr., their son, assisted in receiving. He asked many of his younger friends to the party.

In addition, there were Mr. and Mrs. Paul V. McNutt, she handsome as usual in black; Mrs. Arthur Vandenberg, who had to dash home to help her husband pack—he will attend Senator Borah's funeral in Idaho; the Chairman of the Maritime Commission and Mrs. Emory S. Land, the latter in black with touches of powder blue; Mrs. Lawrence Wood Robert, jr., who wore a yellow blouse with her blue tweed suit.

Others included Stellita Stapleton, in beige with a cunning hat made entirely of pheasants' feathers; "Peter" McHarg, in a gray wool dress with a diamond pin on one shoulder; Margot Lee, in dark green; Anne Hallowell, and Pendleton Hogan, William Blum and Murray Borden.

Younger Set At Mrs. Legare's

Mrs. Legare's party was composed mostly of friends of Mrs. Mead's, who, before her marriage a year or so ago, was Miss Julia Dell Zimmerman.

The cocktail affair was held at the Legare home on S street, which is noted for its handsome decoration. Among those who called during the afternoon were Miss Nancy Leiter, Mrs. Emmons Smith, Mr. and Mrs. F. Moran McConihe, the latter wearing a brown coat trimmed with fur over her frock, and carrying a muff to match; Pendleton Hogan, James Mitchell and Harold Fangboner.

Mrs. Conner Entertains

One of the gayest parties of the week-end was that given on Saturday afternoon by Mrs. Samuel Conner, who entertained at cocktails for her house guest, Mrs. Randolph Cutten, of New York. The latter left yesterday for California, but hopes to return here in the spring for at least a few days.

The pretty, Titian-haired hostess wore a floor-length dress of chartreuse crepe made with a fitted jacket trimmed at the collar and cuffs with leopard. The guests admired the picture of her home in Kentucky, which hangs on the wall of her Shoreham apartment, and is reminiscent of something right out of "Gone With the Wind."

Among those who dropped by were Dr. Gabriel Turbay, Colombian Ambassador; Angus Malcolm, Sherlock Davis, Mrs. William D. Byron, wife of Representative Byron; Gen. and Mrs. Albert Cox, Mr. and Mrs. Royce Powell, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Stansbury, William Lacy—Mrs. Lacy was home with a cold; Mrs. George Holmes, Max Dunlap and John Logan.

Mrs. Lothrop Stoddard, another of the guests, told friends that her journalist husband, who has been covering the war in Europe and interviewing important governmental figures, plans to sail January 29 on the Washington to return to this country. Mrs. Thomas Stonborough, mother of John Stonborough of this city, will also board the liner for a visit here from her home in what was once Austria.

The Shugrues Entertain at Tea Until 8

Relatives, Doctors And Diplomats Make Up Large Company

"When a member of the Moran family gives a party, the guests just don't go home," remarked one of those present yesterday at the tea held by Dr. and Mrs. John J. Shugrue at their home, 2123 Leroy place. Mrs. Shugrue is the former Miss Peggy Moran.

It was well after 8 o'clock before the last person left their home.

It was something of a family affair, as the hostess's sisters, Mrs. Abner Drury and Mrs. Oswald Schuete, and her sister-in-law, Mrs. Robert Moran, all assisted. There were doctors galore present, among them Dr. Moran, the latter's husband.

Pretty Hostess Wears Beige

The pretty hostess, who received in a drawing room filled with white carnations, jonquils, and bowls of roses, wore a frock of beige lace made with puffed sleeves, a fitted bodice, and full skirt. Mrs. Drury, who poured tea while her husband mingled with the guests, had chosen a black frock with gold accents and a corsage of white gardenias, while Mrs. Schuete's dress was fashioned of black marquisette.

Spring flowers filled a bowl on the center of the dining room table, which was also decorated with silver tapers. Most of the guests gathered around the piano when Dr. Charles F. McEnerney sat down to play.

Among those present were Dr. and Mrs. William A. Morgan, who seemed to know everyone there, debutante Patricia Hurley, accompanied by Dr. Henry Beall Gwynne, and Mr. and Mrs. James Cunningham.

A list of the guests would have sounded like a roster of "Who's Who in the District Medical Profession," for in addition to the above mentioned, there were Dr. John H. Lyons, Dr. and Mrs. George B. Tribie, Dr. Raymond D. Holden, jr., and several others of the medical profession.

Diplomats, Wives Among Guests

The Diplomatic Corps was represented also, with Senora de Pastoriza, wife of the Dominican envoy, Senora de Recinos, wife of the Guatemalan Minister, and Signora de Coppola of the Italian Embassy among those pouring. Also assisting were Mrs. Ernest Lundeen, Mrs. F. McKenzie Davison, Mrs. John Pelley, Mrs. George Allen, Mrs. James Mitchell, Mrs. William Gwynn and Mrs. John Lyons.

Mr. and Mrs. James Moran were other members of the clan present, as were also Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Hartson, Mr. and Mrs. Hilleary Hoskinson, Mrs. William B. Shearer, Mr. and Mrs. Barge Hartz and Mr. and Mrs. Thilman Hendrick.

The Counselor of the Mexican Embassy was accompanied by pretty Senora de Fuentes, and Capt. and Mrs. Jorge Godoy were other diplomats among the guests. Miss Patsy Kyle, daughter of the hostess, mingled with the guests and generally assisted throughout the afternoon.

Party Honors Mrs. Hill

Guests present Saturday for George Williams' cocktail party found a bright fire blazing away in his apartment living room, Scotches and cocktails handed about by beaming colored men, and dozens of delicious homemade sandwiches.

Guest of honor was Mrs. Patrick Hill, American-born wife of a new member of the British Embassy staff. Mrs. Hill, who comes from an artistic Chicago family, looked like a picture in a dark suit with silver buttons shaped like hearts, a pale pink blouse and a small hat with yards of veiling.

Mr. Williams' apartment is one of the most attractive in Washington, with dark red damask curtains, fascinating prints, and old furniture. Among those to meet Mrs. Hill were Mrs. J. L. Houghteling, in a smart green wool suit trimmed with dark fur; R. A. Opie, Second Secretary of the British Embassy; Mrs. Sims Snow, who is en route to Florida; Mrs. Scudder Doeg, in gray; Andrew Wylie, Ralph Snowden Hill, and Miss Ruth Jones.

The Hunt Country

Dinner at 'Featherbed Farm' Honors Guests Of Compton Smiths; Parties Enliven Week-End

A LARGE NUMBER of parties given for the many visitors in the hunt country these days made the past week-end an unusually gay one.

Mr. and Mrs. Crompton Smith gave a dinner last night at their home, Featherbed Farm, in honor of Mr. and Mrs. S. Prentice Porter, of Lake Forest, Ill. Mr. Porter is joint master with Austin Niblack, of Mill Creek Hunt, near the Chicago suburb. Prior to 1933 the hunt was called the Onwentsia Hunt.

As their own country was frozen up, the Porters came to Virginia for some fox hunting, but owing to weather conditions here they probably won't have much of a chance.

SANDY McLEOD entertained the younger set at a skating party yesterday afternoon at the large pond on his Huntland farm. Afterwards everybody enjoyed a high tea.

On Saturday Mrs. Rigan McKinney gave a buffet supper at Burrland for the younger set, followed by bridge, poker, and conversation. Among those present were Mrs. Rosemary Ward and her houseguest, Miss Carol Metcalf, of Providence, R. I.; Miss Laura Sprague, of Lake Forest, who is visiting Mr. and Mrs. Daniel C. Sands; Miss Eleanor Keith, of Brockton, Mass., who is staying with Mrs. S. Preston Luck, and Miss Jane Wilbur, of Warrenton.

Also Mr. and Mrs. Newell Ward, Miss Catherine Hulbert, Mrs. Silvie Hazard, Stephen Clark, Mike Kerr, Henry Frost, Bill Worrall, James McCormick, Louis Duffey, William Hulbert, Remson Williams, Gerry Webb and Louis Murdock.

Mr. and Mrs. T. Beatty Brown were hosts at dinner the same evening to celebrate the latter's birthday. The guests played Twenty-one and bridge until a late hour at Mt. Airy," the Brown home near Upperville. Among those present were Mr. and Mrs. Taylor S. Hardin, Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Sands, Mr. and Mrs. Robert V. Clark, Mr. and Mrs. Turner Wiltshire, Mr. and Mrs. Crompton Smith, Mr. and Mrs. Ludington Patton, Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Fletcher, Mr. and Mrs. Robert Fletcher, Miss Willett Leache, Sandy McLeod and Ned Chase.

THE FAUQUIER-LOUDOUN Polo Club played its first game of indoor polo in the club's history yesterday afternoon, when a team went to Pikesville, Md., to compete with the 110th Field Artillery. The Virginians were mounted by the Maryland team. The indoor armory at Pikesville is one of the best in the East and they hav had a very successful season there.

The main difference between indoor and outdoor polo is that three members instead of four constitute a team and a large soft ball is used. The line-up for the Virginia boys yesterday was Richard J. Kirkpatrick, of Warrenton; Charles V. B. Cushman, of Upperville, and Robert V. Clark, of Middleburg.

EARL S. POTTER, prominent New York businessman and a member of the Warrenton Hunt was elected a member of the Gold Cup Race Association at their annual meeting held recently. Mr. Potter recently purchased Fair Oaks, a farm near Warrenton, from Hugh Spilman. He is a member of the hunts committee of the National Hunts and Steeplechase Association and has been an amateur rider of steeplechases.

E. Astley Cooper, of Warrenton, was reelected chairman of the Gold Cup Race Association; Robert C. Winmill, vice chairman, and George W. Cutting, secretary and treasurer. Other members of the committee are Amory S. Carhart, Howard Fair, Kenneth Jenkins, Sterling Larrabee, Douglas Lees, Raymond McGrath, Harry Pool, George Sloane, Richard Wallach, jr., and J. Chauncey Williams.

Morgenstiernes Honor Retiring Holland Aide

Notables Learn at Party That Capital Is Colder Than Iceland

Guests who attended the tea Saturday of the Norwegian Minister and pretty Mme. Munthe de Morgenstierne were only slightly surprised to learn that Washington this week is colder than Iceland. Their informant was Agnar Jonsson, Attache of the Danish Legation.

Honor guests were the retiring Secretary of the Netherlands Legation and Mme. van Troostenburg de Bruyn, who will sail in February for Holland. After a short stay there, Mr. van Troostenburg de Bruyn will go to Berlin for duty.

Miss Perkins At Party

Seen here and there:

The Danish Minister and Mme. de Kauffmann, one of the most striking couples in the Diplomatic Corps . . . the Swedish Minister, Wollmar Bostrom, chatting while his wife poured tea . . . Miss Frances Perkins, Secretary of Labor, accompanied by Mrs. Ernest Poole, wife of the novelist, who with her husband was a dinner guest at the White House earlier in the week. When a friend said to Miss Perkins, "I thought you didn't go to cocktail parties," she replied "I always come when I'm asked to the Norwegian Legation, as the Morgenstiernes are old friends of mine."

Mrs. Demarest Lloyd, looking like a blonde princess in a sable wrap and small hat to match, chatted with Marshall Exnicios . . . Mrs. Creighton Peet, with a silver fox scarf over her black velvet suit, offered a lift home to a Georgetown neighbor, Mrs. Herbert Feis . . . Countess van Rechteren Limpurg accented her black frock with a bright red hat and bag to match . . . 'The Right and Wrong Fit in Dresses

Here are three arguments for authoritative dress size measurements. Below are two girls, both aged 8, and both wearing size 8 frocks. Note difference in fit. At right is the typical woman of 1940 in her Civil War-inspired gown of modern Eastman acetate rayon. The model is a perfect size 14, but if she were plumper or taller, the gown wouldn't fit so bewitchingly.

Right Measurements Sought Of Modern Feminine Figure

By Marshall Adams

The Post Fashion Editor.

IF YOU'RE interested in learning exactly what your body measurements are, the girth of your hips, the length of your neck and the size of your waistline, you need not bother looking up dressmakers or fitters. Just trot down to the Agriculture Department's Bureau of Home Economics and get yourself expertly measured by an anthropometrist and within half an hour, you will know all about your latitudinal or "government" spread, and where to define your waistline if any, and how.

Marshall Adams (measure-outer)

More than one woman has wished she had her precise and authoritative figure measurements without the involvement of dressmakers' tapes, but until this month she was never permitted expert attention cost free. Such is the privilege of any Washington woman from now until the end of 1940. And not only will her figure measurements be clear, but she also will be assisting an interesting project whose sole raison d' etre for the next 11 months is to tabulate weights and measures of the feminine body.

Years of Research

Ruth O'Brien, chief of the division of textiles and clothing of the Agriculture Department's Bureau of Home Economics is chiefly responsible for the WPA's new 1940 appropriation for tabulating an accurate scale of measurements of the feminine figure. Back in 1926 when Miss O'Brien commenced an exhaustive search of human proportions in her researches in chemistry and textile work, she discovered that nothing but chest, height and weight measurements of aggregate numbers of people existed in chart or tabulated form. Said Miss O'Brien, "Research proved that ever since the time of the Greeks, artists have been aesthetically basing human proportions on the mystic figure 7, and, but for practical dressmaking measurements, there are only a few dull recorded facts existant on men's uniform measurements—those being the result of statistical reports gleaned after the World War. There are no corresponding facts about women."

Realizing that American dress houses have no present accurate size standards to go by in manufacturing so-called "true" sizes for women and misses, Miss O'Brien set about correcting this situation for the safeguard of the buyer and the convenience of the manufacturer. The intrepid former college professor of textile chemistry helped win a WPA allotment for taking wholesale measurements of children which undertaking she directed from 1937 until last June, when the project expired. During that time, exactly 147,080 children of varying ages (from 15 different states) were anthropometrized with the result that the old method of scaling kiddies' clothes by age was proven "old hat" and misleading.

Height Guide—Not Age

WPA survey bulletins showed that garments should be sized by height and weight or by height and hip measurement, since one child of ten may have grown like Jack in the Bean stalk while the other of the same age might still look like one of the little Liliputs. Whether every garment manufacturer will start calling his suits or frocks "Chubbies," "Leans," "Average" or "Overgrown" rather than age "6" or "4" has not been determined yet. However, the New York clothing trade has shown enthusiasm in getting their business governmentally measured up for them.

A Woman's New York

By Alice Hughes

New York, Jan. 21.

NOTHING like a quiet winter Sabbath in this sleepy little old town! Truly a day of rest and enjoyment. Not a thing to do until 4 in the afternoon, when I chug demurely off to look in at the Hotel Waldorf cocktail party which ushers in what may be called our "Annual Sonja Henie Week."

SONJA HENIE.

I found a big shindig in progress, all right, but I didn't see my pals of the film press, only a large group of big men unknown to me. What goes on? thinks I, this must be a pink tea for pachydermic wrestlers. But I was wrong, and the party was right. These were just the metropolitan sports writers asked in to meet the Norse Nymph. Then the little Henie arrived, all pink cheeks and pretty teeth and a chronic smile. She wears high heels and a tall hat to make her look big, but she doesn't fool us any. Wearing black, with only two diamond clips at the chest, she was a lovely picture indeed, and easily cowed the sports boys.

This was the first time I had coped with the wonder girl in person, and I was delighted with her slimness and slightly startled to learn that she talks our best variety of slang all the time. Hollywood's famous culture has molded her, I can see. She made a crackerjack impression on one and all, and the following night glided out on the ice at Madison Square Garden before 16,500 people and entranced us all with her lovely work in the rink version of the ballet, "Les Sylphides," and especially the tango she skated with Stewart Reburn. That was the real show stopper, and the crowd nearly blew off the roof.

SOME of us feel that our brilliant and pugnacious little mayor, "Spike" LaGuardia, is getting a mite above himself in his ambitions for our plodding cross-roads. First he wanted to move Hollywood here, lock, stock and Hedy Lamarr—then he baited every hook to get our 1940 fair the Divine Dionnes, whom he would install in a perfect palace on the site of the late grandiose Soviet building. Come, now, "Spike"—haven't we already got your airport, Rockefeller Center, and you? Not even New York can have everything.

Heading South

"Pardon me, but would you mind if I were waited on first? I'm in such a rush—"

"Well, I'm in a rush too—why Marge! Of all things!"

"Dot! I didn't know that was you! What on earth are you doing in town?"

"Well, I just couldn't get off any sooner—but I'm leaving for Nassau Wednesday."

"I'm going to Palm Beach Thursday. I never was so late——"

"I was terribly stupid to have been caught in all this cold weather—especially when I simply can't stand cold weather—but I've just been so busy—"

"So have I . . . Now where is that clerk? . . . Oh there she is! "Waiting on someone else! Honestly, these clearance sales make it so hard for a person to buy resort things."

"I know. I've been looking everywhere for some deck accessories and things and the town's just cluttered up with people buying flannelette nightgowns and galoshes."

"I can't find the right kind of a white belt anywhere—Oh, say, could I get waited on? . . . She doesn't even look at me! The stores ought to put on extra help while people need things for the South this way.

"I've never been so rushed in my life. If I don't get off Wednesday I don't know what I'll do. My doctor says I've simply got to have some sunshine. And besides, the season at Nassau closes Februaruy 22."

"That's the way I feel about Palm Beach. I'm terribly run down from all this war work. And then there's a much nicer crowd there now than later."

"I know. Simply everybody's in the South. Did you ever see such a dead town—Oh say, I was next! . . . Well. But I'm in an awful hurry because I'm starting South in two days—honestly they don't have any consideration here. . . ."

"Well, I'm terribly run down anyway. The Christmas parties took so much out of me."

"Me too. And then I just can't stand cold weather."

"That's the way with me. I'm allergic to it. And then all this flu epidemic has gotten me upset."

"Another thing, I had just worn myself out in all these benefits."

"So had I. Well this whole war strain is so hard on people."

"Isn't it! I get nervously exhausted just from reading about it. And you just can't turn your radio on any more without hearing something awful."

"It just made me ill this morning to hear about the Finns' fighting in 50 degrees below zero. I've been upset all day."

"Me too. That's why I just feel that I must get away and get hold of myself—Oh say will you wait on me? . . . I want to see a lounging robe. Something light and soft . . . that will pack easily . . . Yes, you see I'm going South . . ."

"Say, I have to run along now and hunt a play suit."

"Well, have a good time and take care of yourself."

"All right, I will. You take care of yourself."

"You bet I will!"

Mary Haworth's Mail

Realtors Make Woman 'Fighting Mad' When They Tell Her $35-a-Month Rent Is Cheap in Washington

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: As a last resort, I am placing my problem before you, although I well realize it is out of your line. The problem is how to find a decent home at a reasonable rental? Nineteen months ago we came to Alexandria from a Northern city. Here we pay $35 a month for a third floor flat of four rooms and bath (heat included). Up North we had a 6-room flat with our own furnace, basement and yard for $20 a month, believe it or not; and we lived in a nice residential section on a bus route.

In comparing what we had there with what we have here, let me say a word about taxes. Our landlady here tells me that her taxes are $10 on $1,000. She pays about $85 a year. Our landlord up North paid $33.37 on $1,000—just three times the taxes paid here. So can you explain to me why local homeowners can get such exorbitant rentals when the taxes are so low?

If I were leasing my present apartment from a Northern landlord, he would be ashamed to ask more than $18 a month, yet my landlady here has tried to raise our rent to $40, and she was able to look me in the eye while doing it! I have heard that this is a clique of real estate agents in the District and nearby Virginia and Maryland who are responsible for these awfully high rents. While I don't know if this is true, I DO know that something is responsible.

Budgets composed by banks specify that your rent should not exceed one week's salary if you are to make a successful living. Yet it takes one week's pay plus a third of another to meet our present rental. My husband works long and hard hours for his salary, and it worries me that we are forced to pay so much of it out in rent. I have been to several real estate companies, trying to find a cheaper—but still decent—home without success. They tell me I'm LUCKY to have my present apartment—a statement that makes me fighting mad.

Why can't I get a home like I had up North at the same rental? I have no opportunity under existing circumstances to put aside money for the education of our two boys. It's beginning to get me down, and that is why I am writing to you. Can you help me?

MRS. DISCOURAGED.

Living Costs Soar In Capital City

DEAR MRS. D.: The most nearly irrefutable explanation that I have been able to obtain (from informed sources) for the "exorbitant rentals" in and around Washington is this: "It's the price you pay for living in the Capital City." The additional suggestion was offered that, "the drastic turnover in rental occupancy is necessarily reflected in operating expenses"—a theory which fails to take into account the possibility that if rents were more reasonable, the turnover might be less.

Defenders of the rental status quo further justify the situation by saying that per capita income in Washington is second highest in the Nation's large cities, the leading city being San Francisco. They attribute the significant short-term tenancy to the fact that the majority of Washington's population is "transient"—since Washington is an educational, research, social and winter resort center, in addition to being the seat of government and therefore constantly shuffling Federal employes into and out of the city. As proof of the largely transient population, they quote home ownership of residential property at 37.6 per cent.

However, I was unable to uncover any clues leading to the solution of your problem, namely: how to be satisfactorily housed for less than $35 a month, while experiencing the supposed privilege of living in the Nation's Capital. All with whom talked agree with the rental agents aforementioned, in thinking you have an extraordinary value (as local values go) in your present arrangement.

My own experience yields a similar conclusion—even though my sentiments coincide with yours. According to my view, the situation doesn't "make sense." But that's the way it is—and the city's renters simply have to school themselves to endure a bitter bargain. M. H.

What to Do With Dozen Doilies?

DEAR MARY HAWORTH: One of the Christmas gifts I received was a set of one dozen beautiful, hand-crocheted linen doilies, about six inches in diameter. I am sure that I know just where these should be used. I know they are used under finger bowls, but I seldom use finger bowls in my home. I have seen them used on glass plates when serving sherbet or fruit cup, but I am not sure this is correct. The friend who gave them to me is coming to visit me soon, and I would like, if possible, to use the doilies while she is here. Your suggestions will be appreciated. A. H.

Your Own Experience Propounds the Answer

DEAR A. H.: Your own suggestions seem to cover the list of possible "uses" for a set of 12 small doilies of uniform size. They would "go" perfectly with finger bowls, and are frequently used (as mentioned) with sherbet or fruit cup courses. So, if finger bowls would smack of stilted affectation in your household, why not parade the gift for your guest's benefit in the alternative manner which your social experience propounds? M. H.

Miss Haworth will be glad to help you in solving your problems. Write her in care of The Post Woman's Page.

Your Figure, Sir!

Men Prolong Lives by Keeping Inches Off Their Beltlines; Exercises Needed To Prevent 'Corporation Front' Developing

IT has been said that a woman's waist moves up and down with the fashion but that man's—being more consistent—expands steadily in a horizontal line.

Most men are fairly nonchalant about this progressive expansion but the life insurance companies look upon it as an unmitigated hazard. Your chest should be at least 5 inches larger than your beltline. When the two are equal, you're in bad shape!

One authority says flatly that 50 pounds of excess cuts your life

Tone flabby abdominal muscles this way

expectation in half. He goes on to say that one excess inch of beltline further decreases your life expectation to 45 per cent, 4 inches' excess to 25 per cent!

Keep Beltline in Check

On the basis of those calculations a man of 50 who has let himself take on 50 pounds of excess avoirdupois with 4 inches too much beltline has tossed away about 15 years of his life! It is worth your while to keep the old beltline in check.

A "bay window," or, if you prefer, a "corporation front," is the penalty of excess fatty tissue and flabby muscles plus the work of gravity. As the muscles of the abdominal wall lose tone, gravity causes the abdominal organs to sag and protrude, and the muscles spread as they are distended.

The remedy is twofold: Bring your weight down in the vicinity of normal and exercise to tone the muscles of the abdominal wall. But don't start bending over to touch your hands to the floor! That's no use!

With a "corporation front," all abdominal exercise should be taken flat on the back on the floor, knees flexed, and feet on the floor. In this position you exercise with a minimum of weight bearing. The various parts of the body are held in their relatively normal position and you exercise without strain.

Take It Easy at First

Strenuous exercises should be preceded by simple, easy ones. Begin by pulling the small of the back down to touch the floor. Do this rhythmically for 10 counts. Progress by twisting vigorously at the waist to touch the thighs to the floor, first on one side, then the other. Hold the knees together and try to keep the small of the back on floor.

A good third exercise would be from the same starting position—flat on the back on the floor, knees flexed, feet on floor. Slowly raise the hips off the floor until the body is in a straight line from knees to chest. Hold. Then slowly return to starting position and repeat. Six times will be enough for a starter, later increase to 12 times.

The foregoing exercises are simple and easy but astonishingly effective for toning flabby abdominal muscles. After you are in pretty good condition, try this one:

Flat on the back on the floor, legs stretched straight down, arms straight up on the floor overhead. Stretch, then swing the left foot up and the right hand down, touching them together. Swing back to starting position and repeat with right foot, left hand. Continue for eight counts. Very gradually increase the number until you are doing 20.

Hot Doings of a Cold Week Shake a Shivering World

By Gladwin Hill.
Associated Press Staff Writer

New York, Jan. 21.—It got so cold in Norway (54 below) that the farmers had to put overcoats on their cows . . . and the mercury even went to zero in Satan's Kingdom (Conn.)

In short, the weather ran away with the dizzy doings trophy last week for the second week in a row.

The temperature dropped 79 degrees in 36 hours in Latvia, and it was so cold in New York that the city put two police officers on skates!

The wind in Buffalo picked up a motorcycle and tossed it across a street, and it was so cold there that a hobo, offered a suspended sentence, took a look outdoors—and asked to be sent to jail . . . and a hobo in Memphis was reduced to bumming a dime from a blind beggar!

The Putnam Valley, N. Y., public health society had to cancel its meeting—because too many members were laid up with colds. . . . and when the temperature hit three below in Springfield, Mo., all public events were canceled—except a lecture on Siberia!

The lone guy who seemed to be able to take it was the Sioux City, Iowa, man who, with the thermometer at 20 below, walked six blocks in his bare feet—in his sleep!

But it never seems to get cold enough to cramp the cavalcade of cockeyed occurrences—

A Philadelphia Congressman was presented with a diamond ring, and before he could finish his speech of thanks—the ring was stolen . . . Into a Richmond, Va., court came a case entitled "The United States V. 896 Cases of Herring Roe"—and the Herring Roe won!

English department: The Pullman porters' union officially expunged the title of red cap as "Undignified" . . . and the Atlanta weather man changed the designation "partly cloudy" to "partly clear," "lest people get the idea it might rain" (as if it mightn't!)

A Danish vessel's cargo of beans swelled to three times their normal size—and sank the ship.

Postlude

By Ray C. B. Brown.

Hans Kindler conducts the National Symphony Orchestra in Constitution Hall Sunday afternoon. Program: Overture to "Iphigenie en Aulide" (Gluck), "Brandenburg" Concerto No. 3 in G major (Bach), "Waltz of the Flowers" from "Nutcracker" Suite (Chaikovski), "Sharazad" Suite (Rimski-Korsakov).

Patrons of the National Symphony Orchestra assembled in Constitution Hall yesterday afternoon to hear one of the concerts in the "Beloved Symphonic Masterpieces" series, and their reception of the program indicated that they thoroughly enjoyed what they heard. Hans Kindler and his musicians were commended spiritedly after each composition, and at certain moments the applause waxed to enthusiasm. The second movement of the "Brandenburg" concerto, for example, had to be repeated, so prolonged was the demonstration. Dr. Kindler was recalled four times before the intermission, and thrice at the close of the concert.

This warm approval was fully warranted by the manner in which the program was performed. Conductor and players were in notable accord as to the way things should go, and the orchestra gave a sensitive response to every indication of the baton. The reading of Gluck's overture to "Iphigenie en Aulide" had the dignity of style and the beauty of tone appropriate to that perfect model of classical proportion, and was impressive in the breadth of phrasing and the poignancy of expression.

The richness of the orchestra's strong tone, which is remarkable for the number of players producing it, was appreciable at some length in Bach's G major "Brandenburg" concerto, and reached a particularly fine quality in the air from the D major suite which Dr. Kindler inserted in the place of the missing adagio. The two allegro movements were set forth sturdily with a stirring and contagious energy, and it was not in the least surprising that the auditors asked to hear the second over again.

In contrast to the irresistible momentum of the Bach allegros was the graceful gyration of "The Waltz of the Flowers" from Chaikovski's "Nutcracker" suite. For a composer who essayed the writing of ballet music with some distaste and considerable doubt as to his ability in that field, Chaikovski achieved an amazing success. His ballets show a side of his nature the obverse of that displayed in the "Pathetique" symphony, as though the music had emanated from two parts of his mind.

After the intermission came the "beloved masterpiece" of the day, Rimski-Korsakov's Arabian Nights suite, which it is high time that English-speaking people called "Sharazad," as Sir Richard Burton spelled the name of the tale-spinning Sultana in his translation of "The Thousand and One Nights."

The instrumental colors and the rhythmic intricacies of this picturesque work were brought out resplendently in a brilliant performance. Among the players particular mention is deserved by Concertmaster Millard Taylor, whose violin sang the Sharazad theme entrancingly; Adelchi Angelucci, bassoon; Leonard Nanzetta, oboe, and Albert Tipton, flute, for their share in the episode of the Kalandar Prince; and Sylvia Meyer, for her skill in the harp partition. The Kalandar Prince theme is specially tricky for the bassoon, so much so that Alfred Hertz was wont to use it as a test piece for aspirants.

Miss Mann Predicts Hitler Doom

Lecturer Here Says Nazi Rule Exhausting Nation; Assails Goering

Erika Mann, German refugee writer and daughter of Author Thomas Mann, predicted last night that the war in Europe was the beginning of the end of Hitlerism.

The Fuehrer has already physically, mentally and economically ruined the nation, and he instigated the war as a means of hiding his failure, she said.

Miss Mann spoke before 700 persons attending a session of the National Forum at the Jewish Community Center Auditorium.

The speaker based her prophecy on statistics pertaining to life in Germany under Nazi rule—statistics from official Nazi sources. Quoting German publications, she revealed that the health of the people was breaking down at an alarming rate. Between 1933, when Hitler assumed power, and 1938, diphtheria cases more than doubled, infantile paralysis quadrupled, trichinosis increased tenfold, despite the scarcity of meat during the past two years.

Causes Cited

Cause of the disease increase, Miss Mann explained, was inadequate nutrition, overexertion, miserable living conditions. Effects of overmarching among the youth were to be seen in the Nazi statistics that 90 per cent of the young men reporting for labor camp duty were found to have flat feet or other foot deficiencies, she said.

Methodically the refugee-lecturer punctured arguments that Hitler had given the people a higher standard of living by wiping out unemployment.

"Certainly, unemployment disappeared," said Miss Mann. "But the people did not know what they were working for nor how it was to be paid for. They did not realize that all their work was going into armaments, exhausting the Nation economically, and ultimately leading them into war."

Taxes Take Profits

The industrialists who looked forward to huge armaments profits soon discovered that the taxes wiped out their gains, and that state socialism had taken away control of their factories, she went on. Smaller businesses, incapable of mass production, were destroyed. Nor did the peasant escape the crushing heel of Hitlerism.

"Germany has been struck by nazism as if by some deadly disease," averred Miss Mann. "A ruined people cannot fight a war for long. Nazism will collapse with the military defeat of the Nazi regime. And because the people are already exhausted, the Allies must win."

In an apostrophe to Hitler, she denounced him as a "fake and failure." Miss Mann's voice broke with emotion as she asserted that Hitlerism must disappear for the sake of Germany, of Europe, of world civilization.

Warns of Awakening

She warned that even as the rest of Europe after Munich the German people will awake and realize that to accept nazism is to accept the destruction of freedom, truth and justice.

Miss Mann stated Nazi Germany stood out as a tragic example of a nation accepting "political opportunism." The German people, she said, knew well enough that the Nazi government was committing moral crimes in expanding the nation, in absorbing Austria and Czecho-Slovakia, but they justified it on the grounds of opportunism.

"Crime does not pay—political crime does not pay either, so the German people are slowly learning," maintained the writer.

Outside of Germany, particularly in England and France, the Hitler regime was accepted for three reasons, Miss Mann explained. The British and French governments desired peace at any price; there was a lack of insight of Nazi ruthlessness; and there was an absence of moral absolutism, so that the British and French governments were willing to negotiate with a blackmailer—ending at Munich.

People Dissatisfied

Because the German people are dissatisfied with the lack of foodstuffs coming from Russia as a result of the Nazi-Soviet pact, the Czech factories are sending in goods with false U. S. S. R. labels, she said.

As to the future of the Jews in Germany, Miss Mann offered the opinion that any new government in Germany will moderate the anti-Semitic policy which "has never been popular."

She also admonished those who favored him that Goering would not be one whit less unscrupulous than Hitler, and in answer to a direct question, expressed the view that Goering was behind the attempted bombing-assassination of Hitler in Munich.

A decent future is in store for Germany, once Hitlerism collapses, Miss Mann prophesied, so long as the Allies do not repeat past mistakes, but help Germany as well as police her. Otherwise, she added, anything might happen, including a turn to National Bolshevism.

Mrs. Eugene Meyer, who presided, revealed that Miss Mann has been so popular among American lecture audiences, that she has had to refuse 40 engagements during her present cross-country speaking tour.

William Herron, Veterans' Bureau Clerk, Ends Life

William Donald Herron, 42-year-old Veterans' Bureau clerk, was found dead yesterday in the kitchen of a gas-filled apartment at 600 Twentieth street northwest. Coroner A. Magruder MacDonald issued a certificate of suicide.

Two notes addressed to his wife from whom he had been separated 10 years, Mrs. Florence Herron, of Silver Spring, Md., explained that he had been ill for some time. One note, police said, was ragged and worn, indicating that he had carried it in his pocket for some time. It said, "I can't stand it any longer."

The other note repeated the assertion, and gave directions for the disposal of the body and a small amount of property. A former Army man, he asked that he be buried in Arlington Cemetery.

Herron, who had been living at 1914 Sixteenth street northwest, rented the Twentieth street apartment Saturday night, Marshall McGibbin, manager of the house, told police. Surviving, in addition to Mrs. Herron, is an 18-year-old son, Donald, who lives with Mrs. Herron's parents in Fredericksburg, Va.

Seek Spiritual Path to Peace, Chaplain Urges

Sixteen hundred District National Guardsmen yesterday heard Lieut. Col. Churchill J. Gibson, chaplain of the Twenty-ninth Division, urge them to seek the spiritual path to peace.

Pastor of St. James' Church, Richmond, Va., he spoke at the second annual National Guard service at the Washington Cathedral in commemoration of National Guard Day here, proclaimed by the District Commissioners.

Forming at the National Guard Armory at Sixth street and Pennsylvania avenue northwest, the Guardsmen rode by motor convoy to the Cathedral, then marched into their places to the accompaniment of "Onward Christian Soldiers," played by the 121st Engineers' Band of the Guard, under the baton of Meyer Goldman. The 260th Coast Artillery Band of the Guard, under Warrant Officer Joseph Berst, also took part.

Brig. Gen. Albert L. Cox, commander of the District National Guard, who led the procession into the sanctuary, brought greetings to his men, praising their accomplishments of the past year. The Right Rev. James E. Freeman, Bishop of Washington, also spoke briefly.

Second Trial Of Nolan to Start Today

Conspiracy and False Pretenses Are Charged in Indictments

The bankruptcy of the $300,000 Nolan Motor Co. here in 1936 will be studied by a jury in the District Court today in the second trial of William J. Nolan, 48, head of the firm. He is charged with criminal conspiracy and obtaining money by false pretenses.

Nolan was president and general manager of his company. Charges were filed against him and several officers after the company collapsed.

A previous jury disagreed about a verdict on Nolan in February, 1938. Benjamin D. Jenkins, auditor, was acquitted.

Nolan was indicted again in October, 1938.

The new indictment accused Nolan and James F. Callagher, secretary of the firm, of preparing notes and conditional sales contracts on automobiles owned by 10 persons. The papers indicated that the owners bought the cars from the Nolan company and owed $846.30 each to the company. The indictment charges these persons bought their cars elsewhere and did not sign the notes and other papers.

John J. Wilson, assisted by E. J. Armbruster, veteran special agent of the Federal Bureau of Investigation, will prosecute Nolan.

Should Nolan be convicted he would face a possible sentence of four months to two years in jail, to which might be added a $10,000 fine. One to three years in jail might be added if convicted of obtaining money by false pretenses.

Nolan will be defended by Attorney Lawrence A. McGee.

Methodists Trade Pulpits, Plan Parley

4 Bishops Will Lead Hundreds to Attend Advance Meeting

Methodist churches' annual pulpit exchange yesterday sent scores of pastors into strange surroundings for the day, and launched a busy week for the denomination.

Led by four bishops, hundreds of members of the recently united Methodist Church will gather Thursday at Foundry Methodist Church to take part in one of the first Nation-wide Methodist Advance meetings designed to "intensify and strengthen the spiritual life of the church."

The meeting will open at 9:15 a. m. with statements from Bishop Edwin Holt Hughes, of the Washington area, and Dr. Miron A. Morrill, followed by messages from Bishops Clare Purcell, Paul B. Kern and Robert E. Jones.

At 12:30 p. m. while Bishops Hughes, Kern and Purcell are addressing a Methodist men's luncheon at the Mayflower Hotel, the women's group will be having a buffet lunch at Foundry Church. The women will have their meeting at 2:30 p. m.

A joint men's and women's meeting is set for 3:30 p. m., and a youth rally at 8 p. m., with a consecration service following.

The Methodist Union, sponsors of yesterday's pulpit exchange, will hold their annual "Victory Dinner" January 30 at Hamline Methodist Church. Dean Lynn Harold Hough, D. D., LL. D., of Drew Theological Seminary, Madison, N. J., will speak on "Defeat and Victory in a Confused World."

A resolution was adopted expressing gratitude to the Kiwanis Club and Bynum E. Hinton, chairman of its committee on education of physically handicapped children, for their efforts in working for the transfer. Allison is to be converted into a special school for instruction of crippled boys and girls.

Fire Damages Capital Residence

The cold winds that swept Washington yesterday chilled Mrs. Katherine Huntington, 51, housekeeper at the home of Dr. John Marshall Gaines, 1616 Longfellow street northwest, so she made a fire in the fireplace. The result was more heat than she expected as the fire ate its way in between the walls. Billy Gaines, 15, points to the damage. Another cold-weather fire occurred earlier at 3620 Newark street northwest when an electric heater drawn too close to a bed set the linen afire. Harry Middleton suffered hand burns in attempting to extinguish the blaze. He was given first-aid treatment by firemen

Mrs. Rogers' Rites to Be Tomorrow

Funeral at St. Charles Church for Arlington Civic Leader

Services for Mrs. Catherine M. Rogers, 59, one of Arlington County's most active participants in civic affairs, will be at St. Charles' Catholic Church tomorrow at 9:30 a. m., with burial in Columbia Gardens. She died Saturday at her home, 1216 North Vernon street, Arlington, Va.

MRS. ROGERS

Mrs. Rogers was a charter member of the Arlington County Chapter of the American Red Cross, serving as its president for five years, as secretary for four years, and as a welfare worker for nine years. She was decorated by the War Department in 1918 for selling Liberty Bonds.

Among the societies Mrs. Rogers aided in organizing were the Arlington County Federation of School Leagues, the Ladies Auxiliary of the Ballston Fire Department, the Organized Women Voters of the County, the Auxiliary to the Arlington and Fairfax Firemen's Relief Association, the Ladies Auxiliary to the Clarendon Fire Department and the Arlington County Woman's Democratic Club.

She was president of many of the organizations, also serving as chairman of the Woman's Committee for School Bonds, president of the Ballston Citizens Association and chairman of numerous other civic bodies.

Mrs. Rogers was a resident of the county for 27 years. Surviving is her husband, John W. Rogers, of Arlington, and a brother, J. Charles Callahan, of Washington.

Jitter-Bugging Called Off— For 'Safety'

They called off the jitterbug contest at the dance of the bartenders union—"Old 75"—in the National Press Club Auditorium last night. They refused to sell more tickets after 11 p. m.

The reason: Too many customers.

It was decided to cancel jitterbugging in the interest of safety after more than 300 couples packed themselves onto the dance floor. The "Paul Joneses" were called off, too, but for a slightly different reason:

"We didn't want couples getting mixed up so that some fellow might grab another's girl and then there'd be trouble. This party's got the reputation of being one of the quietest social affairs in Washington and we want it to stay that way."

W. A. Carroll was chairman of the dance committee. Charles Angel is the union president; Claude Martin, the financial secretary, and J. T. Madden, the recording secretary.

Rev. I. P. Smith Broadcasts on Catholic Hour

'Selfish Citizenry' Blamed in Part On Government

The Very Rev. Ignatius P. Smith, O. P., last night criticized the Government as "partly responsible" for creating a selfish citizenry in America.

"An increasing number of our people are finding it difficult to discover reasons either for the payment of just debts or for the voluntary donation of what they have for the welfare of others," the Catholic University professor said over WOL on the Washington Catholic radio hour.

Getting Habit Created

The Government is "partly responsible" for such a situation, he declared, "because it has created among millions a habit of getting rather than giving."

"By excessive taxes it has made getting and the evasion of giving equally smart," he continued, "and by placing wealth always on the defensive it has crushed in many quarters the nobler impulse of the wealthy to give unless they have to."

The Rev. N. C. Acton

The Rev. Nathaniel C. Acton, assistant rector of St. John's Episcopal Church, Lafayette Square, yesterday told the congregation that "it was encouraging that the Government is beginning to realize that the goal of human society must be the brotherhood of man."

"We are a long way from attaining that goal, even in our churches, but it is encouraging to know that the Government at least recognizes what the goal is. It is a challenge to us all, especially those of us who profess to be followers of the Christ."

Making their first appearance in their new uniforms, 60 members of the Takoma-Silver Spring, Md., Junior High School Band will present a variety show Thursday at 8 p. m. in the auditorium, Chicago and Philadelphia avenues.

Farnsworth Makes 3d Bid To Leave Cell

Grand Jury Here Resumes Foreign Agent Inquiry Today

The extraordinary grand jury investigating Washington activities of foreign agents and propagandists will plunge into a mass of records when the second week of the inquiry begins today.

Meanwhile, the sensational spy prosecution of former Lieut. Comdr. John S. Farnsworth will echo again in Judiciary Square at a hearing on Farnsworth's third effort to leave Atlanta Penitentiary by a writ of habeas corpus.

Records placed before the special grand jury by Henry G. O'Donnell and Floyd M. Rett, special assistants to the Attorney General, were understood to deal with transactions of several persons and companies named as suspects.

The records were collected in months of work by the Federal Bureau of Investigation and other agencies. Secrecy of the investigation is secured by two deputy United States marshals who guard the corridors, so the nature of the records could not be learned.

However, their possible nature was indicated by Attorney General Murphy several weeks ago, when he gave Rett and O'Donnell a list of suspects and directed them to look into suspected passport forgery, military espionage, mail frauds and failure of foreign agents to register with the State Department.

Three officials and one Russian-American firm admitted violation of the registration law last month.

Farnsworth claims his constitutional rights were violated when he was sentenced to 4 to 12 years for ferreting out naval secrets for Japanese agents. He contends that he was entitled to withdraw his plea of nolo contendere (no defense) and go on trial before a jury.

Farnsworth is represented by Attorney George S. Hawke, Cincinnati, and John F. Finnerty, New York City. They plan to take the testimony of Justice James M. Proctor, of the District Court, who sentenced Farnsworth, and of Attorney Richard Tedrow, who advised him.

300 Attend Donor Banquet

The Pioneer Women of Palestine last night observed the organization's thirteenth anniversary at its annual donor banquet in Shoreham Hotel. Three hundred guests participated in the program to raise funds for Holy Land settlers.

Highlight of the evening was a dramatic sketch on the life of Dr. Chaim Weizman, Zionist leader, by Mrs. David Kushner. Musical entertainment was presented by Miss Nettie Sadle, pianist, and Milton Schwartz, violinist, Miss Marie Syrkin, coeditor of the Jewish Frontier, described life among the pioneers.

Mrs. Harry Grossman and Mrs. I. Goodman were cochairmen of the general committee; Mrs. Samuel Bugatch, program chairman; Mrs. Samuel Horvitz, mistress of ceremonies.

Demaret Beats Goggin In 'Frisco Open Finals

The Washington Post Sports

Toast to Coast Open Victor

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

Willie Goggin (standing), drinks milk to his conqueror, Jimmy Demaret, in the San Francisco Match Play Open Championship. Demaret, of Houston, Tex., defeated Goggin, home-town pro, 2 and 1

Takes Event For 2d Time; Wins $1,100

Houston Pro Wins, 2 and 1; 4 Under Par for Final Round; Leads All the Way

By the Associated Press

San Francisco, Jan. 21.—Pitching and putting in incredible fashion, playing his shots with the precision of a finely-tuned machine, Jimmy Demarest, of Houston, Tex., defeated Willie Goggin, local entray, 2 and 1, today to win the $5,000 San Francisco Match Play Open Golf Tournament.

For 35 holes, the Texas Tornado of Golf thrilled a gallery of 3,000 fans with some of the finest club work seen here in years.

He finished four shots under par, for the Lake Merced course, a par 36-36—72 layout which stresses accuracy from tee to green. Goggin himself had nothing to be ashamed of. He completed the jaunt, most of it in chilly weather, in two under par.

Winner Never Down

Demaret's performance throughout the tournament was unexcelled. After qualifying in second place with a 71-70—141, he won all five of his match play contests without once being down to an opponent.

With his victory the smiling Texan carved himself a new niche in the ten-year history of the tournament. He became the first player ever to win it twice.

In addition he jumped into the lead as top money winner on the present winter tournament swing—with a total of $2,375. Besides the $1,100 today he won the Oakland Open a week ago, worth $1,200. Two weeks ago in the Los Angeles Open, he earned $75 for a place far back in the field.

After the pair had halved the first six holes, Demaret won the seventh to take a lead he never relinquished. He was one up at the ninth; two up at the eighteenth and twenty-seventh holes.

Demaret Had 71

He turned the morning round in 36-35—71, one under par, to Goggin's 37-36—73.

Each carded 36's on the third nine.

Demaret's long and short irons to the greens and his uncanny putting were factors nothing but super-golf could have overcome. He dropped 20-foot putts for two eagle 3's on the final nine, meanwhile blasting out of traps for three-foot sinkers, tanking other putts from six to 12 feet and twice laying his opponent dead stymies.

He had 13 one-putt greens for the 35 holes. In this respect, Goggin had an edge. He needed only one blow on 15 greens.

Sutherland Confers With Washington U.

Former Pitt Coach Sought By Alumni

Conference Lasts 3 Hours; Spokesman Says No Direct Offers Were Made

By the Associated Press

St. Louis, Jan. 21.—Dr. John (Jock) Sutherland, former football coach at Pittsburgh University, conferred today with the Washington University athletic committee regarding a similar job here.

Following a three-hour conference a spokesman said no direct offers or proposals were heard. However, the discussion was continued tonight.

Sutherland has the backing of a powerful faction in Washington alumni which had been urging the release of Jimmy Conzelman, who resigned a week ago after a championship season.

His resignation caused such a fuss on the campus and among other groups that he was asked to reconsider. But he stood pat, charging the "pressure" was too great.

Washington is a member of the Missouri Valley Conference.

Sutherland had been expected here last week for a meeting with the athletic committee, but it was reported he changed his plans on hearing of the pro-Conzelman demonstration staged by students.

One of the conditions proposed by the group seeking the installment of Sutherland was that Conzelman be retained by the school in the capacity of director of athletics. The failure of this arrangement, as well as Conzelman's receiving an attractive radio offer, is believed to have thrown the entire setup into confusion.

As matters now stand Conzelman is still coach and the student body stands firm in its insistence that he not be allowed to resign.

Roller Goalie Makes a Save While Flat on His Face

This Morning

With Shirley Povich

The old timers in the house will probably shed a tear for the departed glories of the welterweight division when Henry Armstrong and Pedro Montanez climb through the ropes at Madison Square Garden on Wednesday evening to fight for the title. Sniff.

POVICH

Who is Armstrong? An over-fed, ex-featherweight champion who for lack of any opposition resembling a good welterweight has been able to fight at 10 pounds under the limit and still rule the class. And Montanez? By what authority is he contesting for the welterweight title? The last time he was in a ring, he was knocked out by Fritzie Zivic who has never been accused of any great skill.

The welterweight division has, in fact, lacked a truly transcendent figure since Decoration Day, 1926, when Mickey Walker lost the title to Pete Latzo in the latter's hometown of Scranton, Pa., on what was suspiciously regarded as a hometown decision. He was the last great welterweight.

The title was bandied about with unbecoming frequency after 1926. Latzo held it only a year and a month. Rough, tough John Dundee, a graduate of Baltimore preliminary ranks, outslugged him in a battle almost totally devoid of skill. Two years later interest in welters sagged to a new low when Dundee lost his crown on a foul in the second round against Jackie Fields.

Jack Thompson Decisions Fields

Three times within the next 14 months new welter champions were crowned. Fields lost a 15-round decision to Young Jack Thompson at Cleveland, and for a time it appeared that the title at last was in stable hands. Thompson, a flashy, hard-hitting Negro lad, needled new interest into the class, but surprisingly was beaten by Tommy Freeman. The next year, Thompson re-established himself by knocking Freeman out and regaining the title.

But by that time the welterweight division had become a vague sort of merry-go-round. Lou Brouillard came along to lick Thompson in 15 rounds at Boston, and who should come back to beat Brouillard and reclaim the title but Jackie Fields. That turn of events contributed nothing to the high estate of the division, and the welter class went into even more of a decline when Young Corbett 3d, who was not so young, outpointed Fields in a brief ten-rounder at San Francisco.

Jimmy McLarnin, a glorified lightweight, took advantage of the weak competition in the class to move in and knock out Corbett in one round to gain the title. And then ensued the McLarnin-Barney Ross affairs—three of them. Ross beat McLarnin, McLarnin beat Ross, and then Ross beat McLarnin all over again in a third bout.

It may appear out of order to class McLarnin and Ross as cheap champions for both were high-caliber performers, but actually they were not welterweights. They were suety lightweights only a couple of pounds over the 135-pound lightweight limit and ruling the welterweight division only because there was a total lack of good 145-pounders.

Won Title From Barney Ross

Armstrong is in the same category—a good lightweight who won the welter crown from Ross when that over-fed lightweight was on the decline. It is again a case of a good little man ruling the class in the absence of a good big welterweight.

The welterweight division need not apologize for its history as a whole, however. It has produced fighting men who for their pounds and inches have been as clever and numerous as the champions of any other class. In fact, it may be difficult for any weight division to match three such champions as Joe Walcott, Jack Britton and Mickey Walker, all welterweights.

Walcott, the Barbados Islander who was a physical freak with the build of a heavyweight and no neck whatsoever probably punched as hard as any middleweight or light-heavy. He stood only a fraction over 5 feet, but it is a matter of record that he left his feet and reached up and tagged the heavyweight, Joe Choyinski, on the chin and knocked him out when Choyinski was one of the good heavies.

Mickey Walker Tops as Fighter

Britton held the welter crown for most of three years and was as much of a stand-out as Joe Louis is today in the heavy division. He would make his opponents fight his battle and then knock them out or outpoint them as the whim struck him.

Of Mickey Walker, it is sufficient to remember that as welterweight champion he owned a left hook that many a heavyweight would have liked to own. Walker was called the perfect fighting machine, clever, with a dynamiting punch and an amazing ability to take it when the occasion demanded. Even when he put 30 additional pounds on his aging frame and essayed to fight as a heavyweight, he gave Max Schmeling a whale of a battle and actually licked Jack Sharkey.

But when he was a welterweight, Walker was a legitimate 147-pounder, taking advantage of every one of his pounds to get home a numbing punch or withstand a rush. No overgrown featherweights like Armstrong could concede such as Walker and Britton 8 to 10 pounds and hope to take anything except an artistic pasting.

Tommy Tucker To Substitute On Fight Card

The all-Italian heavyweight fight booked as the feature of tonight's weekly boxing card at Turner's Arena fell through yesterday when it was announced Italo Colonello, one of the principals, is sick with the grippe and will be unable to appear.

So instead of Colonello, Tommy Tucker will be Mike Alfano's foe in the eight-round bout which will determine the opponent for Natie Brown in a scrap here later in the month.

Tucker, a stablemate of Colonello's under the wing of Jimmy Johnston, boasts victories over Tony Morelli, Gus Dorazio, Bill Polard and Mickey Dugan.

Colonello's illness comes at an unfortunate time for he was recently chosen to substitute for Gunnar Barlund and fight Nathan Mann January 25 in one attraction of a program for the Finnish Relief Fund.

In a second eight-rounder tonight Joey Spangler, willing Richmond welterweight, will meet Johnny Duca, of Portsmouth, who recently gave Phil Furr a close battle at the arena. Joey, also defeated by Furr not long ago, has been promised a return crack at Phil if he gets past Duca.

In supporting bouts Mickey Duca, featherweight brother of Johnny, meets Marcus Pittie in a six-round return go. Four-rounders bring together Hunter Crostic, of Richmond, and Jimmy Burns, of Johnstown, Pa., and Bogie Man Coleman and Hitoshi Tanaka.

Cunningham To Retire After 1940

Announces Close Of Track Career In Radio Interview

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 21.—Glenn Cunningham, holder of the unofficial world record for the mile run and American records at a mile and 1,000 yards, announced his intention to retire from competition in a radio interview tonight.

Appearing on a sports program, Cunningham said that he would not compete after this year and would seek a teaching position in a physical education department, "preferably somewhere in the Midwest."

"I've continued in competition these past two years mainly with the hope of trying out for my third successive Olympic team," Cunningham said. "Now conditions on the other side have made the holding of the Olympic games impossible, so why go on? Hence my decision to retire."

Cunningham finished second to Jack Lovelock in the 1,500-meter run at the 1936 Olympics in Berlin as the New Zealander established the Olympic record of 3:47.8. Cunningham was timed in 3:48.4, also under the former Olympic record. In 1932, after winning his trial heat, the Kansan was fourth in the Olympic final at Los Angeles, trailing Luigi Beccali, of Italy; John F. Cornes, of England, and Phil Edwards, of Canada, after an exciting stretch battle.

In 1934 Cunningham established a world mile record of 4:06.7, which stood until 1937, when Sydney Wooderson, of England, lowered the mark to 4:06.4. Cunningham subsequently surpassed that feat by running a 4.04.4 mile on the Dartmouth College indoor track at Hanover, N. H. This is not accepted as a world record, however, as it was made indoors, but is listed as an American record. His 4:06.7 mile still is the American outdoor record and he holds American indoor records of 2:10.1 for 1,000 yards and 3:48.4 for 1,500 meters.

Want Court Games

The unlimited basketball team of the Art Welders, in Alexandria, have issued a blanket challenge to strong District and Maryland fives. The manager's telephone number is Alexandria 2469.

On the Line

With CONSIDINE

New York, Jan. 21.—You can win yourself a bet on this one. Which is the world's largest sports event?

Here are some clews: It attracted 15,000,000 persons last year, during its 15-day span. A newspaper which came into existence solely to print the results of it, sold more than 1,000,000 copies a day during the event. It was covered by 210 reporters, 45 photographers, four moving picture operators, six radio cars and a television outfit. The competitors came from six nations, and not a line was printed about it in the United States.

CONSIDINE

Jeff Dickson, the Natchez Parisien, was telling us about it the other night.

"It's the Tour de France," Dickson began, in his Southern France drawl.

We said that that sounded like one of those all-expense trips abroad, with a non-imbibing group from Eagle Rock Teachers College.

"It's a bike race," he explained gently, "and I don't mean the kind of bike race you're thinking of," the temporarily retired European boxing promoter added. "And I guess it couldn't happen anywhere else, except in France. Golly, over there they worship the various bicycle champions more than American kids worship DiMaggio, Ruth, Dempsey and those fellows. Any kid who can't name the 21 cycling champions of France—well, he's ostracized.

Started His Own Newspaper

"This Tour de France was started in 1899. Fellow named Henri Dasgranges thought it up. Well, you know how it is in France. You've got to have a little more than a good idea to get any newspaper publicity, so Desgranges decided to start his own paper just to tell the people about his race. He named the paper 'L'Auto.' When the government took over my arenas at the start of the war, and I came back here, the circulation was a steady 600,000. All sports, and it goes to nearly twice that much when the race is on.

"If you think there's any national hysteria here over a Louis fight or the World Series or a Bowl football game, you ought to see France go nutty over that bicycle race. I don't know what will happen if the Germans or Russians interfere with it this year. Every Frenchman who can walk will want to fight them, if they do.

"It goes like this: There's usually about 75 riders, divided into six teams—French, Germans, Italians, Belgians, Dutch and Swiss. Each team has a captain, who's supposed to keep his guys primed and make them keep pedalling. The race starts in Paris, usually on July 10, with a terrific hullabaloo, and usually the first stop is Lille. Next day they go over the mountains to Strasburg, then skirt the edge of Aix-Les-Bains, then up in the Alps to Grenoble and around the coast to Nice, Marseilles, Toulouse, Biarritz, then Bordeaux, Nantes, La Havre and back to Paris."

We said it sounded like the late lamented C. C. Pyle's bunion derby.

A Holiday for the Tour da France

"Yeah, but it doesn't raise bunions on their dogs, particularly," Jeff recollected. "Pyle got his idea from the tour. Months before the thing starts the cities of France begin offering Desgranges really big dough to route the tour their way. When the itinerary is finally settled it's always a big story, but when the tour comes through one of the chosen towns it's a holiday. Really, the people just knock off work for miles around, line the roads or sit on grassy hills with their lunch baskets, waiting for them to dust by. Then, too, each city has its own velodrome and the usual thing is for the cyclists to do 20 laps around the city's bike track before continuing the race.

Defeat Reading Team In Home Debut of Newly Formed Loop

Washington's representative in the recently formed Eastern Amateur Roller Hockey League—Capitol Casino—crashed its way into the win column for the first time yesterday in its first start on the home floor, routing Reading, Pa., skaters by an 8-3 count with a five goal barrage in the first period.

Beaten by the Reading sextet in one of its two previous games, yesterday's victory was ample revenge for the youthful wheelers of the Casino. Bill Ritter, left wing, provided the outstanding scoring performance with three goals, besides having a hand in the scoring of several others.

It was Ritter who tied up the count in the first period after Reading's Stanbaugh had opened the scoring. He added another point in the same stanza and one in the second. Jack Shugrue also contributed two goals in the first period and George Graham one.

With their 5-1 lead, the Casino lads took things easy the last two frames. Newcomer, left wing of the invaders, tallied his team's second point in the second period. Ritter's goal, however, and another by Right Defense Tomlin boosted the Casino's lead to 7-2 going into the last stanza. Reserve Latshaw, of Reading, and Casino's Graham closed out the scoring.

Bell 'to Give All' For Cleveland Club

New Braunfels, Tex., Jan. 21 (AP). Roy (Beau) Bell, outfielder traded to the Cleveland Indians said here today he intends "to give them all I've got and I firmly believe it will be good." He added that he appreciated the opportunity of redeeming himself for the past two years' performances.

The Detroit Tigers traded him for Bruce Campbell, another outfielder.

Elwood Cooke Wins Florida Net Tourney

St. Petersburg, Fla., Jan. 21.—Elwood Cooke, of Portland, Oreg., sixth-ranking player of the United States, blasted Ed Alloo, Berkeley, Calif., entrant, off the courts here today to win the Florida West Coast tennis singles and a second leg on the West Coast trophy.

Cooke won in straight sets, 6—4, 6—1, 6—1, to repeat his 1938 victory here.

The dapper little Oregon player, runner-up to Bobby Riggs in the Wimbledon championship in England last summer and co-holder of the Wimbledon doubles title with Riggs, scored his second straight victory of the winter campaign by completely outclassing the 20-year-old Californian.

Nats Open Season Here With Red Sox; Play Night Games

Unless Connie Mack's Athletics move up a notch or two in the American League standings and in the interest of the fans, the Nationals will get the worst of it in the Holiday double-bills according to the schedule released yesterday.

The Nats meet the Mackmen in Philadelphia Memorial Day and entertain the A's here July 4, while the Red Sox will be here for a twin bill Labor Day.

The Red Sox open the season here April 16, in the first of a three-game series while on the same day the Yankees open in Philadelphia, Cleveland in Chicago and St. Louis in Detroit.

Each team draws 12 Saturday and 12 Sunday dates at home.

The expansion of night baseball finds 21 games on the card with Chicago, Cleveland and Philadelphia host to seven each. The Nationals play the White Sox June 25, the Indians June 18 and the Athletics August 13.

All the Eastern teams will play at Griffith Stadium before the Nats entertain the Western pennant contenders early in May.

The Yankees will close the season here September 28 and 29, thus the Redskins will not have the park until October again, if Clark Griffith stands to his last year's threat of keeping football out of the stadium until the baseball season is over.

Montanez to Rely On 'Torpedo Attack'

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 21 (U.P.).—Pedro Montanez, the submarine socker from Cayay, claims that his torpedo attack to the body will sink Welterweight Champion Henry Armstrong in their title fight at Madison Square Garden Wednesday night.

Pedro, of Puerto Rico, probably the most dangerous body puncher among current mittmen, said tonight he was confident that hammering Henry cannot weather his barrage to the midsection because (1) Armstrong is wasp-waisted and (2) Armstrong's head-long, semi-crouching style was developed primarily to protect his belly.

Accordingly, Montanez promised to concentrate his fire on the Los Angeles negro's torso and forget all about Henry's inviting but rugged head. Pedro insisted that none of the welter king's previous 112 opponents ever made Henry's solar-plexus their lone target. Hence Henry was able to campaign with brilliant success and win the featherweight, lightweight and welter crowns.

Pedro and his manager, Lou Burston, recall that "wasp-waisted" fighters rarely can take it downstairs. Boxers with too-slender waists, have their innards concentrated so closely that blows to the pantry are far more damaging than when landed on the same sector of men with wider waists.

"Remember the great Kid Chocolate of Cuba, one of the flashiest featherweights and lightweights that ever

Pro Committee Discuss Change in Lions' Ownership

Dayton, Ohio, Jan. 21 (AP).—A meeting of the executive committee of the National Professional Football League to pass on the change in ownership of the Detroit Lions was adjourned today without final action.

Carl Storck, league president, said he wanted to discuss a "few minor details" with George A. Richards, who last week sold the Lions to Frederic L. Mandel, jr., of Chicago, for a reported $200,000. He promised a decision within ten days.

Dan Topping, of the Brooklyn Dodgers, and Bert Bell, of the Philadelphia Eagles, attended the meeting. Storck said Charles Bidwell, of the Chicago Cardinals, and Lee Johannes, of Green Bay Packers, the remaining members of the executive committee, were in accord with today's action although unable to be present.

Brewers Defeat Wilkes-Barre, 32-26; Tie Sphas For Lead

Moe Dubilier Tops Attack; Bloom Hurt

Big Center Suffers Eye Cut in Fight; Rabin Impressive In Debut Before 550

Held scoreless from the field in the first 19 minutes of play and outclassed from the starting whistle, the Wilkes-Barre Barons lost their third consecutive American Basketball League game to the Washington Heurich Brewers at Heurich gymnasium yesterday, 32 to 26.

Some 550 fans saw the local league debut of fiery Phil Rabin. The diminutive scoring whirlwind played a fine floor game and contributed three field goals and as many free tosses to the Heurich attack.

It was the fine passing and team direction of Coach Mack Posnack and the 11-point scoring of hard-working Moe Dubilier, however, which stole the show and which enabled the Brewers to breeze in a more decisive winner than the score would indicate.

Tied With Sphas

By virtue of yesterday's victory over Wilkes-Barre the Brewers forged into a tie with the Philadelphia Sphas for the league lead, the standings now reading:

	W.	L.	Pct.
Washington	11	7	.611
Philadelphia	11	7	.611

Unscheduled features were provided in a red hot man-to-man duel involving Rabin and Wilkes-Barre's scrappy Allie Schuckman and in a last-period altercation involving Mike Bloom, towering Heurich center, and George Synott and Barney Wilke of the Barons.

In the fading minutes Bloom, who had played a fine game under the backboards, was charged by Synott. They exchanged several wild swings and then clinched. Bloom then squared off with Barney Wilke on the center jump and collapsed to one knee after the scramble, allegedly from a punch delivered by Wilke. Though groggy, Bloom remained in the game.

Heurich Leads, 11-4

Rabin, Dubilier, Ben Kramer and Bloom collaborated in a first period attack while holding Wilkes-Barre scoreless from the field and were leading at the horn, 11 to 4.

Not until four minutes of the second period had elapsed could Wilkes-Barre score from the floor, Wilke sinking a shot from side-court at this point. The Barons stepped up their pace, but were trailing at intermission, 22-15.

Dubilier whipped into stride in the last period and the Brewers were leading at one time, 31-18, but had their margin whittled in the last five minutes.

In Heurich Amateur Basketball League preliminaries the Jewish Community Center Big Five defeated Marvin's Credit, 42-31, and United Typewriters routed Garvin's Grill, 69-42.

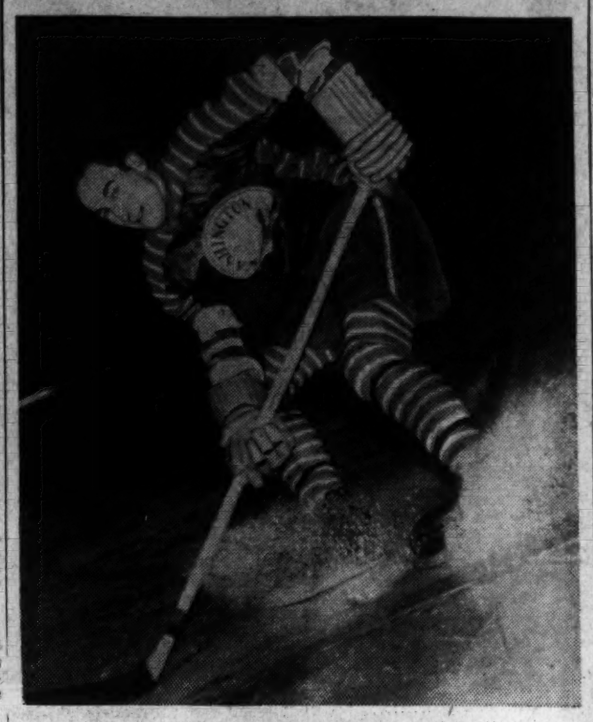
J. O. U. A. Mechanics Win Tenth Game

Martinsburg, W. Va., Jan. 21.—The Junior Order United American Mechanics basketball team of this city chalked up its tenth consecutive victory last night and at the same time kept its record clear of all losses for the season so far by defeating the strong Chambersburg (Pennsylvania) All-Stars here last night 28 to 24.

Reese led the Pennsylvanians' scoring with 13 points while Jacobs was their outstanding defensive star. For the locals the scoring was well divided among Stuckey, P. Fowler and Stotler.

Eagles Host to Orioles At Riverside Tomorrow



EAGLES' DEFENSE MAN LEN BURRAGE

Burrage Cairns Return to Line-up; Bunny McKillop to Play Here for First Time; D. C. Team Out to Break Slump

Strengthened by the return of defense Len Burrage and wing Bill Cairns, the Washington Eagles will try to snap out of their slump tomorrow night at the expense of the Baltimore Orioles in an Eastern Amateur League match at Riverside Stadium.

Burrage and Cairns, important cogs in the Eagles' attack and defense, are reported to be recovered from injuries which kept them on the sidelines for several games. Burrage was resting an infected foot and Cairns a punctured right leg.

Local fans will see Bunny McKillop in action for the first time. Responding to a hurry-up call from Coach Redvers Mackenzie after Alan Kuntz broke a wrist, McKillop arrived here from Canada last week in time to play at River Vale. The newcomer did nothing sensational in that game but gave promise of helping the Eagles as soon as he becomes accustomed to their style of play.

Although Washington has won five of seven meetings with Baltimore this season, the Eagles anticipate a hard battle tomorrow night, for in their last invasion of Baltimore the locals were routed, 10-2.

Part of the proceeds from the match will be donated to the President's Fund for Infantile Paralysis.

Heavy Card For Women's Court League

Other games scheduled for the week are: Tuesday, Mount Rainier vs. Alexandria Wildcats, at Central at 8 p. m.; Agriculture vs. Commerce, at Central at 7:30 p. m.; Highlanders vs. Chesapeake & Potomac Telephone Co., at Central at 9:30 p. m. Friday, Federal Bureau of Investigation vs. Army Medical, at McFarland at 8:30 p. m.; Veterans Bureau vs. Treasury at McFarland, at 9:30 p. m.

Agriculture defeated Army Medical, 34 to 22.

Federal Bureau of Investigation defeated Treasury, 42 to 21.

Rovers Trip Birds In Opener, 7 to 6

By the Associated Press

New York, Jan. 21.—Frankie Boucher, jr's excellent pass work helped the New York Rovers to a 7-to-6 victory over the Baltimore Orioles today in an Eastern Amateur Hockey League game.

After the game, both teams entrained for Baltimore, where they will cross sticks again tonight in the second game of a home-and-home double-header.

Bougher figured in six of the Rovers' goals, setting up three for Mitch Pechet, two for Len Loree and another for Frankie Parker. Abby Collings scored the other tally unassisted.

The Orioles were presented with a marker in the third period when Larry Sharest, Metropolitan Leaguer, playing with the Red Shirts, accidentally kicked the puck into his own net during a scramble around the cage. George Grigor was given credit for this goal, giving him two for the day. Carl Ripley, Fred Hunt, Jack Tuten and George Boll accounted for the other Baltimore markers.

Ernie Dusek Faces Tarzan White in Next Mat Feature

Trazan White, the New York Giants' profootball tackle, will return for the fourth time Thursday night to take over the headline spot in Promoter Joe Turner's wrestling emporium with Ernie Dusek.

As a wrestling exhibition, it should be a sight to behold, for Dusek, who has campaigned the Nation's wrestling circuits almost a couple decades, knows more tricks of the groan trade than Tarzan will before the next Presidential term has been served out.

Maryland and Duke Trail North Carolina In Loop Standings

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., Jan. 21.—The University of North Carolinas undefeated basketball team, winner over five Southern Conference foes, held top position in the loop today as the season neared the halfway mark.

Maryland and Duke were tied for the next spot with four victories in five family starts. Washington and Lee sprung the season's biggest upset last night by conquering Maryland 44 to 25. Duke's lone loss was administered by Maryland early this month, 32 to 30.

Other teams grouped in the first division of quints which have broken even or better are Wake Forest, Clemson, Richmond, W. and L. and the Citadel. The eight ranking teams at the end of February will battle for the title in the annual conference tournament at Raleigh.

Clemson's defending champions opened with a loss to Maryland, but, bolstered by the return of Banks McFadden, all-Southern center, they toppled four circuit rivals in a row before yielding to an impressive Duke team, 54 to 49, Saturday night.

Examinations reduced this week's card to six games, four slated for Saturday.

North Carolina State Cagers, needing victories badly in order to qualify for their home town tourney, face North Carolina on Tuesday and Maryland on Friday.

Saturday tilts will find Wake Forest at Duke, Maryland at Clemson, William and Mary at the Citadel and Virginia Tech at W. and L. North Carolina goes outside the loop to play Navy at Annapolis.

Rangers Win, 4-2, Over Boston for League Lead

New York, Jan. 21 (U.P.).—The New York Rangers took undisputed possession of first place in the National Hockey League tonight by defeating the Boston Bruins, 4-2, before 16,214 in Madison Square Garden.

Tonight's victory broke a tie between the teams for first place and marked the Rangers' fourth triumph over the Bruins, with one tie, in five games.

Boston went out in front on Milt Schmidt's first goal late in the first period, but Clint Smith equaled the score 40 seconds later. The Rangers went ahead to stay in the second session when Mac Colville netted the puck.

Bryant Hextall put the Rangers two up in the final period. But the Bruins fought back, Milt Schmidt scoring his second marker. Then Clint Smith put the game on ice in the closing minutes.

Detroit Wins Over Maple Leafs

Detroit, Jan. 21 (U.P.).—Four Detroit farmhands from Indianapolis traded bumps with the Toronto Maple Leafs tonight and came away with a 3-to-2 victory in a National Hockey League game before a crowd of 7,229.

Connie Brown, rookie wing center up from the Capitols, counted twice against the Leafs with the aid of Joe Fisher and Butch McDonald, who drew assists on each goal. Kenny Kilrea, another rookie, scored the third Detroit goal.

Toronto cashed in on a Detroit penalty early in the first period, and Chisholm scored at 7:34. Brown evened it up at 14:48 with a backhand shot. Kilrea put the wings ahead at 16:24 of the second, and Brown gave Detroit the deciding goal two minutes after the third period opened. Red Heron counted Toronto's final goal just three minutes before the game ended.

Scholarships For Athletes At N. C. State

Students Who Meet Qualifications to Be Aided for Five Years

By the Associated Press

Raleigh, N. C., Jan. 21.—Alumni of North Carolina State College announced today that athletic scholarships would be openly awarded students who meet qualifications at the institution for at least the next five years.

D. W. (Dutch) Seifert, of Weldon, elected president of the group which organized the Wolfpack Club, said the club would provide athletic scholarships for all sports from contributions made by alumni and supporters.

N. C. State is a member of the Southern Conference.

N. C. State is a unit of the University of North Carolina, of which Dr. Frank P. Graham is president. In 1936 Dean J. W. Harrelson, who is a founder of the Wolfpack Club, voted with President Graham for the so-called Graham plan, intended to prohibit giving special preference to athletes in award of scholarships in the Southern Conference. The plan was virtually repealed two years ago.

"Whether we like it or not, subsidizing of athletes is and has been going on for years in every school of our acquaintance," said President Seifert. "For the last two years we have endeavored to bring our proselyting activities out from under the table.

"We believe that the time has come for athletic scholarships to be placed on a businesslike basis, open and above-board from every standpoint. And that is exactly what we are going to do."

Wade Ison, secretary-treasurer of the Wolfpack Club, and college publicity man, said the scholarships would be handled entirely by an alumni committee, independent of any faculty control.

Each division of the University of North Carolina has its own scholarship committee of the faculty to act on scholarships controlled by the institution, but these committees do not have control over scholarships furnished by alumni.

Dean Harrelson of N. C. State was one of 17 organizing founders of the newly-founded Wolfpack Club.

There has been no formal ban on athletic scholarships at N. C. State since December, 1937, and lists of alumni contributions to aid students have been published in the alumni magazine since 1938.

Graham Refuses Comment on Plan

Chapel Hill, N. C., Jan. 21 (AP).—Dr. Frank P. Graham, president of the University of North Carolina, of which N. C. State is a unit, said tonight he had no comment on a plan of State college alumni openly to award scholarships to athletes.

Dr. Graham sponsored the so-called Graham Plan which the Southern Conference adopted in 1936 to prohibit aid, by both the schools themselves and by outsiders, to students because they were athletes.

Two years ago the conference lifted the ban on aid to athletes by outsiders—alumni, alumni clubs and others—but retained the provision that no school could help students from school funds because they were athletes.

Things You Hear About All Sorts of Sports:

Orrell Mitchell, for many years football and basketcall coach at Gonzaga and a leading basketball official of the District, may leave the Eye street school next fall . . . Reports are that Devitt Prep wants Mitchell and vice versa . . . Several of the local college basketball coaches have been bemoaning the city's lack of good court officials . . . Said one the other day, "These referees are getting so they think they're bigger than the game. Everytime you turn around a whistle's blowing and someone is penalized. Too many of the fouls being called are needless." . . . This coach also said it was his belief that poor attendance at college basketball games is due partly to the promiscious whistle blowing of officials.

MUNHALL

Jim (Sweet) Lalanne, North Carolina football star who left school after being caught offsides on a classroom play, will return next semester . . . Knox College, once the country's leader in football defeats, is reportedly raising $500 to purchase Chicago University's big drum . . . If Loyola of the South goes back into intercollegiate football (and there is a powerful alumni drive favoring such action), it is said Dixie Howell will be offered the head coaching job . . . in the meantime, Howell, whose Arizona State Bulldogs played C. U. in the Sun Bowl, is negotiating with Howard at Birmingham . . . Jock Sutherland's keen interest in the Washington University (St. Louis) football situation is said to be prompted by his belief that powerful elevens could be developed there on the same budget now allotted for the sport . . . That recent pro-Conzleman demonstration by Washington U. students may bring into existence a "fireproof coach."

Rule Should Be Changed

College boxing, as a spectator sport, seems definitel, on the downgrade . . . the introduction last year of 12-ounce gloves instead of the customary ten took most of the punch out of collegiate mitten-slinging and we see this season that referees are instructed to award technical knockouts on the slightest evidence that one fighter is outclassed . . . According to all reports this trend hit a new low at Annapolis Saturday when all a Middy had to do to win a Tko was to belt his adversary one or two good socks . . . Although this department certainly is not anxious to see college kids become disfigured from beatings in the ring, we believe if college boxing is to endure ,uch longer several changes will have to be made . . . Most needed improvement is the elimination of the silly rule forbidding any spectator applause during the course of rounds . . . Anyone who has ever seen an exciting fight knows it is only natural to cheer or groan with your favorite instead of suppressing your emotion until the end of the round . . . As for the premature stopping of fights, this often works an injustice on the loser . . . How many times have we seen a boxer get off the floor and in no time at all deposit his opponent of the resin for keeps? . . . Ed Morel, the Duke middleweight, who all but knocked the head off Morris Roseman, of Maryland, in a recent bout at College Park, was on the floor himself only a moment before he stiffened the Terrapin. Dick Pinck, the little Washington & Lee forward, whose brilliant play was a chief reason for the Generals' upset of Maryland, is only a junior although he appears to be at least 27 years of age.

C. U. Cagers Disappoint

This Boxer Johnny Paychek is certainly cashing in, as Confucius might say . . . Thirty-two knockouts—"Oh, Johnny! Oh, Johnny! how you can sock! . . . According to comparative scores, George Washington's basketball team is 32 or 35 points stronger than Maryland's five . . . The Colonials routed W. and L., 44-31, and W. & L. upset the Terps, 44-25 . . . That would indicate a 32-point margin for G. W. . . . Or again, Maryland beat V. P. I., 49-40, and G. W. swamped the Gobblers, 74-30 . . . G. W. would seem 35 points better on this exchange . . . Speaking of Maryland basketball, we wonder why Coach Burt Shipley won't permit his boys to play at Tech Gym, because it is "dangerously slippery" when the floor at College Park is even more slippery? . . .

The Catholic University team is a keen disappointment to Coach Fod Cotton, who had thought it potentially one of his best . . . the Card courtmen have lost six games in as many starts . . . therein is the result of one of the evils of postseason footbatl . . . three of C. U.'s best basketball players, Joe Carrig, Carmen Pirro and Johnny White missed about two weeks of needed practice because of their Sun Bowl trip . . . Frank Dobson postcarded us following the Rose Bowl game that the best four college teams in the country last season were Southern California's first, second, third and fourth elevens.

Budge's First Year Income Was $85,000

Exhibitions Head Champ's 1940 Plans; Tourney at Miami

By the United Press

Miami Beach, Fla., Jan. 21.—Don Budge looked back today on a year of professional tennis and decided it was much better than wielding a racquet for silver cups and glory.

DON BUDGE

In a little more than a year Budge has salted away about $85,000, and the money still is rolling away.

"If course, I don't expect to make that much annually," he said. "Most of that money came from my Nation-wide tours against Fred Perry and Ellsworth Vines, and the income probably will drop sharply this year because I don't think we will make any tours."

Don's next competition will be on February 19, when he plays in the Southeastern professional championships here at Flamingo Park. The tournament will be worth $700 to the winner and $350 to the runner-up. Among those entered are Bill Tilden, Vines, Perry, Bruce Barnes and Lloyd Budge, Don's brother, who is professional at the Miami-Biltmore.

To Play Exhibitions

Budge, who will be 25 this year, is extremely interested in his exhibition work.

"What we are trying to do now," he said, "is to create more tennis fans and players. So most of the professionals will tour the country this year to give exhibitions and instructions.

Most of the pros are connected with sporting goods companies and the more tennis players there are the more commission the professionals will earn on equipment sold.

Sitting with Budge was Jack Harris, sponsor of pro tennis. He explained why Budge probably would not make any competitive tours this year:

"Don defeated Perry 28 to 8 matches and Vines 22 to 17. They played in all the big cities in this country and fans wouldn't go for the same gang again. What professional tennis needs now is new blood—a player who can give Budge a fight. And until that day comes Budge won't make any tours."

Riggs Is Green

Bobby Riggs, No. 1 amateur, was suggested as "new blood."

"I understand Riggs isn't interested in turning professional," Harris said. "Besides, as good a player as Bobby is, I don't think he would stand a chance with Budge. After all, Bobby is only 21 and still has lots to learn."

Budge favors an open tennis tournament.

"That's a good idea but it wouldn't work now," he said. "I'm not patting us professionals on the back, but if such a tournament were held, I'd be willing to bet that by the quarter finals only two amateurs would be left and that they would all be on the sidelines by the semi-finals. However, if there is no Davis Cup competition this year it might be a good idea to make up a team of professionals to play a team of amateurs. In the end, with the better amateurs getting a crack at the weaker pros and vice versa, I think you would find the final score would be fairly close."

Budge thinks he will be good as a competitor for another four or five years. After that he hopes to go into the sporting goods business.

Joe McCluskey to Run In Maryland U. Meet

Will Appear in Governor's Mile At Balt. Armory

Joe McCluskey, noted distance runner of the New York A. C. who was featured in the University of Maryland-Fifth Regiment meets of 1937 and 1938 will be back in the Hoffman Street Armory February 10 for another big role.

McCluskey, it has been announced by Geary Eppley, chairman of the games, will run in the featured Governor's Mile and in the two-mile A. A. U. run. In the latter event he will meet up with Tommy Deckard, former Indiana ace, and other top-notchers at the distance.

McCluskey is the national outdoor A. A. U. champion in the 3,000 meter steeplechase, winning the title at the games in Lincoln, Neb., last July in the fast time of 9:23.1. He was runnerup to Deckard in the 3,000-meter indoor championship run which was won in the time of 8:49.4.

Maryland will be represented by Tommy Fields, Southern Conference indoor champion, at two miles and by Mason Chronister in the Governor's Mile.

College Coach Bread Line Still Growing

By Whitney Martin,
Associated Press Sports Writer

New York, Jan. 21.—They can't very well put a bounty on them, but something will have to be done to curtail the ever-growing output of coaches by the college factories or the members of that esteemed profession will find themselves not only playing their games by quarters, but living on them, if their friends are generous.

The coaches' private bread line already is so long that the rumor of any vacancy creates a rush rivaling the opening of the Cherokee Strip, and the situation is getting no better rapidly.

In fact, one widely known mentor, who prefers to remain anonymous, has taken stock of the situation and his findings are anything but encouraging to the battalions of eager young men who annually burst from our institutions of higher learning with a sheepskin in one hand and a pigskin in other, and the coaching world their oyster.

"The law of supply and demand has caught up with the profession," he says. "Look at the number of football players graduated each year, and then count the jobs that are to be filled.

"And there's no security in the profession. You know what happens when you run across a few losing seasons. Chances are you're out and scratching around for another job—probably not coaching."

The mento in question does not take this pessimistic view because he fears for his own future. In fact, he pointed out that so far as he was concerned he could coach or leave it alone.

"I coach because I like it," he said, "and my case is typical, I believe, of the coming trend. I've had my share of winners and the other teams have won their quota. In my case there's no pressure on me for a winning team.

"Know why? Because if the pressure for a winning team was there, it wouldn't matter much to me. They could hire another coach—and I'd still have a job. I'm on the staff of the physical education department, and have full faculty status. Besides that, I have another profession I could fall back on, entirely unrelated to sports."

He added that he believed the college coach of the future would be a member of the faculty, with the same consideration due him that might be accorded an English professor or instructor in math, and you don't hear much about the alumni howling at English profs because the students can't make the grades.

"A similar example is Clark Shaughnessy," he pointed out "When football was abolished at Chicago he didn't have to worry, as he held the rank of professor. He left to take a coaching job at Stanford, but that was of his own volition.

"But just look around you, and you'll see what I mean by the supply of coaches exceeding the demand. Take Jock Sutherland, for instance. I consider him the best football coach in the country.

National Cage Race Scrambled as Teams Pause for Exams

Aggies Only Five With Safe Lead

Oklahoma A. & M. PacesMissouri Valley; All Have Chance In Eastern League

By Bill White
Associated Press Sports Writer

New York, Jan. 21.—College basketball players who have been studying screens and set plays have to answer questions about history and mathematics this week, so the national cage outlook is far from exciting.

While midyear examinations may blight the boys, the lull allows a look at the complete picture. It discloses that only one team, the Oklahoma Aggies of the Missouri Valley Conference, has definitely stamped itself as the class of its league, although Oregon State looks fairly safe in the northern coast sector.

In all other sections of the country—notably the East, the Big Ten and the Big Six—the fight has only begun and may not end until the last day of the season.

In three other sections, this week's work may help clarify an otherwise very muddled picture. Rice, with a four game pre-exam schedule, can pull away from Texas in the Southwest. Utah can virtually sew up the Big Seven title with a victory over Colorado, and either Stanford or Southern California, meeting in a two game series, can become the "Mr. Big" of the coast's southern section.

Panzer Keeps Going

Notable performances of "independent" clubs last week would include Notre Dame's 55-35 victory over Penn, Duquesne's fine road trip, Butler's 41-34 victory over Detroit, little Panzer College's twenty-sixth straight win, Long Island's twin victories over Blue Ridge and Newark, and St. Mary's triumph over California U.

The situation by sections:

East: All seven teams still have a chance for the Eastern Intercollegiate League title. The week's feature was Dartmouth's demise as its scoring star, Swede Broberg, was limited to a measley five points—the first time in 10 games he has failed to hit double figures. Only one game marks this week's schedule—Princeton opening its "Ivy" League campaign against Cornell at Ithaca.

Among the independents, the week's feature billing goes to the Madison Square Garden doubleheader Friday featuring Michigan State and Long Island University.

Midwest: It's examination time in the Midwest and that cuts down on league warfare, but doesn't entirely prohibit intersectional battles, wherein the Big Ten boasts 50 victories and 18 defeats against nonleague foes. Purdue, still the undefeated leader, has nothing on tap until February 10—date of the resumption of league warfare—and then will play Indiana, tied with Michigan for second place. The week-end's big doings saw Michigan trample Michigan State, 32-27, for the second time this season.

South: North Carolina's unbeaten crew continues to hold the top place in the Southern Conference as a week of examinations loom. The Tarheels have walloped five league foes. Maryland, knocked from the lead by bowing to Washington and Lee, 44-25, climaxes a four-game swing by playing Clemson; Wake Forest meets Duke and North Carolina engages Navy in Saturday's features.

Kentucky and Mississippi State, both winners of one game, share the Southeastern Conference lead but the experts were mightily impressed by Kentucky's opening defense of its crown—a workmanlike 35-26 win over Tennessee. Alabama won No. 5 from Vanderbilt to remain in third place. Kentucky plays 'Bama Saturday in the headline offering.

Big Six: The winners and losers of last week's big thrills meet in this week's curtailed program. Kansas State, surprise winner over Nebraska, on Monday plays last-place Iowa State, beaten by Oklahoma. Saturday, Nebraska and Oklahoma meet. Missouri, victor over Kansas 42-31 earlier in the week, is the league leader.

Aggies Unbeaten

Missouri Valley: The Oklahoma Aggies, generally regarded as one of the best teams in the Nation, stopped Washington 39-23 for the week's highlight performance and have a mark of four victories and no losses. The Ibamen have no games until February 3 when they play Creighton at Stillwater.

Southwest—Those two favorites, Texas and Rice, are on top at the end of a jumbled first two weeks. They share the lead with four wins and one loss apiece. Rice has a tough four-game schedule this week and by winning could get way ahead of the pack. Arkansas, only conqueror of Texas, lost to Baylor twice to drop out of the picture.

Rocky Mountain — Undefeated Utah goes to Boulder to meet once-beaten and defending champion Colorado in a natural. Utah stopped Wyoming, 47-33, for third league win and thirteenth of season, while Colorado crushed Denver, 66-25, and Colorado State, 47-41, in preparation for this week's big battle.

Far West—Stanford and Southern California are deadlocked for the coast's Southern Division title and can break the tie in a two-game series at Los Angeles this week-end. Stanford's win over California and U. S. C.'s victory over U. C. L. A. left them tied at three wins, no losses.

In the Northern Division, Oregon State made a road trip pay dividends by splitting with Washington State and stopping Idaho twice to take a long lead. In the two league battles, Oregon, the defending champion, entertains Washington and Washington State plays at Idaho.

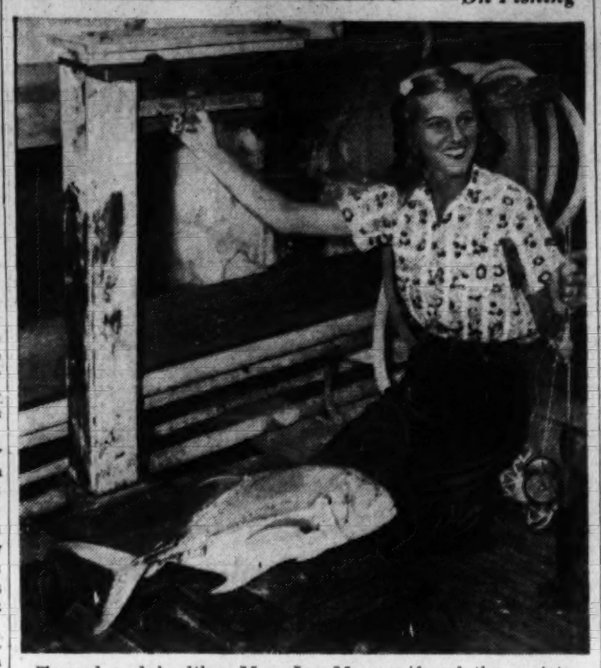
On Fishing



Tanned and healthy, Mrs. Joe Moss, wife of the society orchestra leader and Washington man, displays the 14½-pound jack crevalle she landed off the Miami-Miami Beach Causeway recently

The cold has had some slight effect on southern Gulf Stream fishing, in that it has slowed down the catches of Florida's No. 1 finsters, sail fish. Smaller blue - water gamesters are not wanting, and there has been some exceptional spearfish taken here and there.

ACKERMAN

T. J. Kidd, a Washingtonian, fishing with Capt. Dee Sanderson on the Fun, has a 7-foot 6-inch sail marked up to his credit. Not quite good enough to place in the tournament standings, but nevertheless a nice fish anytime.

Bill Hatch is to be reckoned with in any kind of fishing, and it was on his cruiser Patsy, almost before the echo of the opening gun of the tournament had died out, that he brought in to Pier No. 5 the first blue marlin. Only 169 pounds, to be sure, and topped by the record-busting 342-pounder taken on Friday, but still the first real score in the world's greatest game of competitive fishing.

Good Catches Recorded

In a couple of other classes marks have been hung up that are tough to shoot at—an 81-pound amberjack and a 39-pound dolphin. The latter topping by several pounds the first place fish of Philip Wylie, the author, whose short stories in the Saturday Evening Post during the past six months have done more to publicize Miami's big fishing hole than any other thing that we know of. Yes, sir, he writes fishing, but he also practices that which he preaches.

The best story of the week is on a Capital boy, Joe Moss, gone New York of late years, but still coming back to the home town once or twice each year with his orchestra to play at White House receptions. And it is not because of anything he has himself accomplished—rather because of something left undone, and a crossroads that every man comes to, sooner or later, that insists on teaching his wife the arts of Piscator.

The President has aimed considerable good-natured raillery in Joe's direction because of his penchant of following his fishing with an outboard. Now there is real reason to give him the merry-go-round, for the time has arrived where the pupil has gone beyond the teacher, and Joe finds it necessary to replace the worn, little boy's tackle he has so far foisted upon his wife, with the expensive tools of the finished angler.

Ties Up Traffic

It came about when Joe's missus, with an idle hour of two, hied herself to the Miami Beach end of the Causeway with her 25-cent tin rod and vintage reel to angle for tiny salors' choice.

The count was two in her favor when the water literally exploded where the business end of her line should be. And she wasn't long left in doubt that this time it wasn't any mere pan fish.

Anyone will stop at any time to watch a piscatorial battle, and even here, on one of the heaviest traveled highways in the United States, was no exception. Car after car stopped, four abreast, as the occupants alighted to watch Joe's attractive missus. The reserves were called, and when they found that nothing could be done, stopped too, to watch, until traffic in Miami was wondering what it was all about.

Just a 14½-pound jack crevalle, that when it was finally landed, placed its captor in the tournament lead for the species and won a daily award and a citation.

Where, in all the world outside of southern Florida, is like fishing to be found. It was here just a week ago that Leo Droughton's mate, whiling away a few idle moments caught a 242-pound jewfish.

Trotting Body Expels D. C. Horsewoman

Mrs. Mae Omundson Fined $384.80 by U. S. Association

By the Associated Press

Richmond, Va., Jan. 21.—Frank L. Wiswall, of Albany, N. Y., executive vice president of the United States Trotting Association, announced today that L. C. Curtis, of Bemidji, Minn., and Mrs. Mae F. Omundson, of Washington, D. C., had been expelled from the organization for asserted ly racing a horse under an assumed name and out of his class. A fine of $884.80 was levied against Curtis, and one of $384.80 against Mrs. Omundson, Wiswall said. Mrs. Omundson was named as owner of the horse, against which a fine of $384.80 was also assessed.

The horse was identified as Totum. In the fall of 1939 he was raced on tracks in the Carolinas as a horse named John R., according to the association's statement, and was entered in classes for which Totum would not have been eligible. Protests were received from unspecified Ohio sportsmen.

The following district directors were elected:

Dunbar W. Bostick, Aiken, S. C., for three years; Ben C. Mayo, Tarboro, N. C., for two years; Robert Jewell, Willmore, Ky., for one year.

Olympian Scorers Give Dime-a-Point To Aid Paralysis

The Olympian Club of the Jewish Community Center did its part for the President's Birthday Fund yesterday and at the same time won an exciting basketball game.

Every Olympian player who scored in the 31-28 victory over A. Z. A. Chapter gave a dime for each point registered. The fund, therefore, was boosted $3.10.

E. Burka and Werksman contributed the most to the Olympians winning effort, and consequently more to the Birthday Fund. Werksman's scoring cost him $1 and Burka's 80 cents.

Selections at Hialeah Park

Dear Al,

There is no reason why Eddie Brennan should not make a good racing secretary for Delaware Park. His many friends around Maryland were pleased to learn that William Du Pont had named him. Brennan is popular with the horsemen and comes to his new job with a lot of experience behind him. He always has been able to satisfy the boys around the half-miler and he should jump up to the bigtime in stride. Brennan has been confining his big track work to steeplechase racing secretary of late. Thus Delaware should have no trouble when it comes time to line-up the jumping fields. Pimlico will have a race named in memory of the late Ral Parr, Maryland breeder and sportsman. The jockey club has changed the name of Masquerader, a fixture since 1914, to Ral Parr. It is a spring stake at four-and-a-half furlongs for 2-year-olds and carries $2,500 in added money. Confucius says: Horse named Nutty in second race due to crack down. The Maryland Horse magazine says that Alfred Vanderbilt has added a couple of well bred English yearlings to his stable. These are a colt by Mahmound and a filly by Bahram purchased at Newmarket from Aga Khan's lot. Mahmound and Bahram both are Epsom Derby winners, the latter, in fact, being a Triple Crown winner and an undefeated son of Blandford. Blandford sired Blenheim II, an Epsom Derby winner himself and the sire of Mahmound. I understand they are the first of their sires to be brought to America. They should help the Sagamore Stable. Action, one of the best claims ever made by Hirsch Jacobs, is now standing in stud at the Cannaday Farm at Sparks, Md. He is the horse that had an ordinary racing career before going bad. Then he was sent into steeplechasing and proved a winner. Jacobs finally brought him back on the flat and he was a sensation, winning 11 of 13 starts and taking seven races in a row. Four of these victories were stakes. In all Action won $39,495 and he did it the hard way. Action stopped all the mares bred to him last year. Here's the winners.

BILL.

First race—Red Mantilla is a highly regarded juvenile scheduled to be under the guiding of Jockey Alfred Robertson. Might be the right one in this field of babies. Despite poor showings, Lady Jaffa is getting respect from the clockers and could be a threat. Fantasma may be the third one.

Second race—Arched turned on the heat last out and missed. This one comes from good handlers and should take down the major honors. Wise Ally wound up in last position in that recent race. However, I'm looking for a better effort on a fast track. Miss B. B. to take care of the others.

Third race—A group of maidens of the 3-year-old variety clash in this sprint and Satiation may prove the best of the gang. Ariel Star and Dog House have had their chances but are due respect in this class of competition.

Fourth race—Sun Girl gets in action here with a 100-pound feather. She is promised Mike Caffarella for riding purposes and I'm going to string along. We caught Modern Age once at the other track and expect him to go well here. Sunphantom for the minor award.

Fifth race—Liberty Queen is tossed in this with 97 pounds but may have to carry a bit overweight. However, she appears nicely placed at the weight and I'm going to take my chances. Prompt Pay was scratched last Saturday with this race in mind. Betty's Bobby for the show.

Sixth race—I'm going to give Calling another chance. This is another with a light assignment. When the weight is off I like them. Weary Flower is fit and ready and should be a threat. La Perla is as good as that smashing last.

Seventh race—A race of this kind is not beyond the ability of Grand Marie. She is in good hands and will be out there knocking. Sir Reg and Glasby to battle it out for the place and show.

Eighth race—Uvalde may take the days finale at a good price. Likes the route and can improve on that recent outing. Feng and Sun Appolo to complete the pay-off bracket.

Best bet—Sun Girl.

Maryland Park Ties Regal, 1-1, In Soccer Tilt

Sandy Spring Also In Deadlock Game; Heurich Win, 4-0

The surprising Maryland Park club continued its brilliant play in the second half of Suburban Soccer League season yesterday when it battled Regal, second place holder, to a scoreless deadlock on the Parkmen's field. Several times the Marylanders came within inches of scoring, but each time the stellar goaltending of Regals' Wilson turned them aside.

Another tie resulted between Sandy Spring and La Plata on the former's field, 1-1. Bonifant and Hicks tallied the respective points. LaPlata's R. Kragh was slightly injured on the ice-covered playing surface when he fell. His team was forced to finish with ten men.

In the only other game of the day Heurich Brewers pounded out a 4-to-0 decision over Southern Maryland Democrats on the Monument lot. L. Gunn's pair of goals paced the effort. The scheduled game between Silver Spring and Marlboro was forfeited to the latter when Silver Spring failed to show up.

Suburban League headquarters announced the regular monthly business meeting will be staged at the Y. M. C. A. on Thursday. All teams and officials have been urged to attend.

Wrong Number That Was the Right One

Associated Press WIREPHOTO

A $50 error turned out to be $775 in his pocket instead for Paul E. MacPherson, pari-mutuel clerk at Santa Anita. In testing his totalizer, he hit the No. 12 key instead of the test key and was stuck with a $50 ticket on Prince Bow. The horse won and so did MacPherson

Rosslyn Beaten in Special Match

Shaffer Flower Shop's all-star line-up swept team, singles and doubles matches from the District League leading Rosslyn team last night at Queen Pin Alleys, before several hundred fans.

The Flower Shop five-man team started the first of the three upset triumphs by trouncing Galt Davis' lineup, 1,855 to 1,830, with Ollie Pacini high man with 156-424, while Red King rolled 384. Karl Gochenour was best for the losers with 381.

Pacini and Reds Megaw took the measure of Gochenour and Bill Krauss in the doubles, with 1,273 to 1,193. Perce Wolfe and Joe Freschi subbed in the fifth game of the doubles and picked up 16 sticks but were still 80 back. Pacini was also high in the doubles, with 655.

Frank Mischou's big fourth game of 149 took the lead over Wolfe in the singles and the Shaffer representative won by 652 to 605 to complete the sweep.

Astor Clarke was scheduled to roll in his regular place with the losers but was out with an infection.

Stelle, 72-Year-Old Bowler, Takes 'Old-Timer' Meet

Guy Stelle, 72-year-old former Holy Name and Bureau of Engraving bowler, featured the "Old-Timers" tournament last night at Rendezvous as George Isemann renewed the event for the senior bowlers after a six-year lapse.

The winner in each class will meet Baltimore's best "old timers" later in the season.

Stelle rolled a 363 set to win the 70-year-and-over class with the highest score of the night. "Pop" Crawley and W. G. Crabbe were in the field.

In the 50-to-60-year class, Noble Viers, sr., of the Silver Spring Alleys, nipped Ben Hare, of the Masonic League, by a single pin, winning with 355 to 354 for the three games.

Dixie Davis, of the National Capital League, rolled a 339 aggregate to cop the 60-to-70-year class over Mike Gorman.

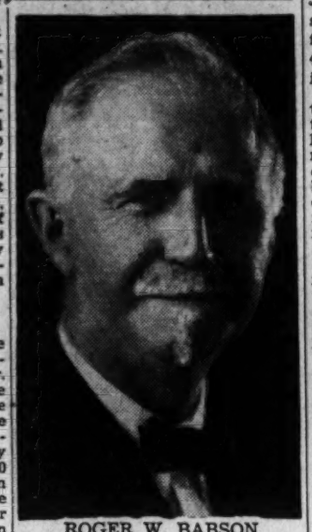
Year's Tourist Trade Expected To Set New American Record

Babson Predicts Nearly Six Billion Dollars to Be Spent on Travel, Recreation, Health; War to Confine Business in U. S. Limits

By Roger W. Babson

Richmond, Va., Jan. 21.—Barrels of business records will go by the boards in 1940. Aviation factories, air lines, gas stations, power companies, machine tool shops, should hit new all-time highs. In addition, the American tourist industry should also smash its way to new peaks. Call it the tourist industry, the resort business, the vacation trade, or what you will—1940 should be the biggest year in its history.



ROGER W. BABSON

This recreation business is not often thought of as an industry. Yet, there's scarcely a town from Maine to Manila that does not have a stake in it. In hundreds of communities, prosperity is wholly dependent on the tourist trade. "Good times" for entire States are tied up with the resort business. It is New England's fastest-growing industry. It's the big "cash crop" of vast regions such as southern California, western North Carolina and all of Florida. It gives jobs to hundreds of thousands of workers, directly and indirectly. It produces millions of dollars in taxes. It is a big and honorable business.

Six Billion Industry

Two weeks ago I nominated the machinery and machine tool business as 1940's industry of the year. The recreation trade will not be far behind in performance, while its prosperity will benefit more people than any other activity except farming and retailing. My guess is that nearly $6,000,000,000 will be spent on travel, recreation and health building. This will be a gain of half a billion dollars over 1939 and may even outrun 1929 in volume, although not in dollars and cents.

For years, railroads, chambers of commerce, and State commissions have spent untold sums trying to sell Americans the idea of "seeing America first." I think the idea was started by the late Edward Bok in the Ladies' Home Journal. It was always conceded to be a good slogan, but it remained for submarine attacks, air raids and "Blitzkriegs" to give the phrase real punch. Annually, $500,000,000 was spent abroad by American globe-trotters from Tientsin to Timbuctu. This year half of this prewar travel item will be rung up on cash registers from Halifax to Honolulu. "See America first" will this year be more than a patriotic slogan.

"Southward Ho"

The winter resorts are the barometer of this business. While the current season has no more than weighed anchor, glowing reports are already scudding in from every bay and inlet. Florida is booked up heavier than in any season since the boom. The Gulf Coasters are packing them in. The Old Southwest is hitting new records. California is welcoming a swarm of frost-bitten Northerners. With Atlantic cruise travel down to a quarter of the normal level, Hawaii is ready to reap a big tourist harvest. If these reports sound too good to you to be true, look at the way department stores are playing up their "Resort Shops." This winter's password is "Southward Ho."

The war is the No. 1 reason that I am counting on to make America's 1940 vacation bill the biggest ever. No. 2 reason is our swelling national income. It has been trending up ever since 1933 and will hit a new high-water mark, since the boom, in early 1940. The $70,000,000,000 figure for 1939 should stretch into $75,000,000,000 in the coming 12 months. More cash in farmers' pockets, more money in workers' pay envelopes, more dividends in investors' accounts, spell only one thing—more spending on wholesome recreation.

Sport-Loving Nation

Third reason why I predict a smash-hit recreation season is the steady trend toward sports and trips. For 20 years this tendency has been gathering momentum. Even in the darkest, drabbest years of the depression, the travel business did comparatively well. The automobile, of course, is the moving spirit of this trend, but it has been ably aided and abetted by the cruise people, the railroads and our national parks. More efficient machines, shorter work days, more leisure hours, have done their part, too.

There also is a fourth reason which is fast becoming a factor. Wise are those communities which wake up to it. I refer to the Northern summer resorts featuring snow sports in winter, while the Southern winter resorts are developing new summer attractions. This is a possibility never even dreamed of until a few years ago. The recent request from people of every State made to the family of Edward Bok, to have his famous Tower in Florida "sing" during July and August, is an illustration of this trend.

1929 Technique Gone

Let us work to make this a constructive movement such as Mr. Bok himself would approve. Rates and profits will not be equal to the palmy days of 1929—but who expects them to be? The tourist industry, like many another, does better in the long run from a sound policy of true service with low prices and big volume than from the 1929 profiteering technique. Whether you are a clerk in a Maine grocery store or the owner of an Arizona "Motel," or a skipper on a Florida fishing boat or a cowpuncher on a Wyoming ranch—get set for the healthiest and busiest vacation year you have ever seen!

Contract Bridge

By Florence Osborn.

John C. Stablein, special writer for Bridge World, tells how poor cards can be outflanked by clever playing. The expert was able to win his six-spade contract by playing to drop a singleton rather than try for the obvious finesse—planning to fall back on a second finesse if he failed.

The singleton king fell to his ace, and, though both missing honors were located unfavorably for finessing, Mr. Stablein made his bid.

Today's Hand

Neither Side Vulnerable
SOUTH DEALER

	♠ K 9 7 3 ♡ J Q ◇ 8 5 ♣ A Q 9 7 2
♠ 6 ♡ J 8 6 3 ◇ K Q 10 9 2 ♣ 6 5 3	NORTH WEST EAST SOUTH	♠ 4 2 ♡ K 10 9 5 4 2 ◇ J 6 4 3 ♣ K
	♠ A Q J 10 8 5 ♡ 7 ◇ A 7 ♣ J 10 8 4

The bidding:

South	West	North	East
1 ♠	Pass	3 ♣	Pass
4 ♠	Pass	6 ♠	Pass
Pass	Pass

Opening lead: K ◇

Here is how he describes it:

"West led the king of diamonds. With any other opening, the slam would be a lay-down, but the diamond lead forced declarer to don his thinking cap.

"He took two rounds of trumps and then led the jack of clubs, in the hope that West might be foolish enough to cover. When West played low, declarer, after consideration, put up the ace of clubs from dummy, and the lone king fell. The hand was then spread for the balance of the tricks.

"No, South didn't get a peek, nor was he superstitious. It was just a matter of percentage. There is a fair chance of dropping the singleton king, and it costs nothing to try. For if this measure fails, if the king of hearts is located favorably, a finesse will furnish a parking place for the losing diamond.

"An attempt to guess either the heart or club situation is a 50-50 proposition. The guess was eliminated because the declarer gave himself a 50-50 chance, plus the chance of dropping the king of diamonds. In other words, he took a free roll of the dice."

They're unleashing another daytime serial this morning on WJSV, and it's probably a very good one, because the people behind it have no truck with minor league shows. They are the same folk who bring you Amos 'n' Andy, Lanny Ross and Orson Welles.

The name of this new gadget is "Life Begins" and the boys will launch it at 11:15 this morning. It's the story of the life, loves and tribulations of Martha Meade.

Martha is a nice kid, unmarried and addicted to doing nice things for other people, who suddenly finds herself bereft of friends, and what is more important, coin of the realm. She gets something of a break when she meets a citizen name of Alvin Craig, and she moves into the Craig household to take charge of an assorted group of young folk of peculiar nature.

The serial will in time evolve not only into the story of Martha Meade, but of the Craigs. It is written, incidentally, by the same writer who authors "Bachelor's Children," now in it's fourth year.

This new show replaces "Brenda Curtis," which was concluded happily Friday morning. As pointed out in previous pillars, this column can take its daytime serials or leave 'em alone, but the folk who are putting "Life Begins" together make all their turkeys into soup, and if you dial twisters don't like Martha and the Craigs, you can be sure that something will be done about it. But you'll probably like 'em, because daytime serials are well tested before being served up for public consumption. This will be in action every morning, Monday through Friday, at 11:15.

WJSV and "Abe Lincoln in Illinois" will be practically synonymous this evening. From 8:30 to 8:55 Charley Daly and Hugh Conover will be in the Keith lobby to describe the gala opening night ceremonies and at 12:15 a. m. Daly will act as master of ceremonies in a quiz on Lincoln between actors and the newspaperwomen who are sponsoring the picture's elaborate debut in Washington.

The Dragon's Teeth

Chapter 9

KERRIE lay in her four-poster. It was warm, and she was covered only to the hips by a thin silk quilt. She was reading Emily Dickinson, absorbed in the lovely, piercing cries of ecstasy.

Kerrie's suite lay in an ell of the mansion, one story above the terrace which encircled the house. There were strong vines and trellises of roses on the walls outside her windows.

The windows were open and through the still curtains the gardens below sounded drowsy with the peaceful seething of crickets. There was an occasional river sound: a splash of oars, the stutter of an outboard motor, once the faint shouts of the peope being borne upstream by a Hudson River excursion boat.

It was quite late. Kerrie had heard Margo and Beau drive up two hours earlier, laughing intimately over some incident of their evening in town together. She had heard Margo invite Beau to stay the night, and Beau's booming acceptance. They had settled down on the terrace below Kerrie's windows with a portable bar, and after a clink of glasses there had been a silence.

Kerrie would have preferred noise. She had actually slipped out of bed and shut the windows to keep out that silence. But later, when she opened them again—it was so stuffy, she said to herself—and just happened to look down, the terrace was empty again.

Then she had heard De Carlos come home, lurching on the gravel driveway and cursing his chauffeur in a thick, liquorish voice. That was when she had got out of bed the third time and locked the door which led to the corridor.

But the house had settled into quiet since and Kerrie, intent upon the poet's verse, almost forgot she was unhappy. Her lids began to droop; the lines swam. She yawned, saw that it was past 3 by her bed clock, flung the book aside, and turned off the bed-lamp.

And instantly things changed. Instantly.

Instantly she quivered with wakefulness.

It was as if the light had been a bright gate, and that turning it off had opened the gate to something that had lain in wait outside, in the thicker darkness.

Kerrie lay motionless straining her ears. But there was nothing to be heard, unless it were the shrilling of the tireless crickets or that slight recurrent creak—like the creak of a slowly swinging shutter. The shutter! Of course.

But there was no wind. Not even a breeze.

Kerrie told herself indignantly she was a fool. She turned over on her right side, drawing her knees up to her chest and pulling the silk quilt up so that her nose and eyes were covered.

That creak.

Abruptly she sat upright in bed. In the darkness she concentrated all her forces of vision on the windows. The darkness was thin and soupy, as if it had been strained through a sieve. She could just make out the curtains.

They were stirring! . . . No. They were not.

There! Again!

This is ridiculous, she thought in panic. It's a sudden breeze that's sprung up on the river. It's a breeze moving the curtains. A breeze . . .

Well, there was a simple way to find out. Just get out of bed and march across the floor to the window, and poke your head out. That's all. Very simple. Then you would know it was a breeze, and that you'd been imagining things like a tot frightened by the dark, and you could go back to bed and sleep.

She slid under the quilt and curled up in a taut ball again, almost smothered.

She could hear her heart clamoring, as if it had slipped out of her chest and taken up a position just above her ear. Oh, this is childish! And she found her legs and arms shaking.

What should she do? Jump out of bed, race across the room to the door that led across the boudoir and into Vi's room . . .

Her heart stopped clamoring. It seemed to stop altogether.

There was something—something—in the room!

Kerrie knew it. She knew it. This wasn't imagination. This was knowledge.

She followed the steps that could not be heard with ears that could not hear . . . from the window, across the patch of hardwood floor to the edge of the hooked rug, on the rug . . . toward her bed, toward her, where she was lying in a ball under the quilt . . .

Roll over.

She rolled over and off the bed. In the same instant something struck the bed where she had been lying. There was a hissing sound, like the sound of a snake.

Scream.

Kerrie screamed. Screamed and screamed.

HER nightgown crumpled, her eyes still red from sleep, Vi met Kerrie in the boudoir.

"Kerrie! What on earth——"

"Vi, Vi!" Kerrie lunged for her friend's high bosom and held on for dear life. "Something—somebody—in my bedroom—tried . . ."

"Kerrie, you had a nightmare."

"I was awake, I tell you! Somebody—climbed up the vines—I think—tried to—knife me——"

"Kerrie!"

"When I screamed, he—it jumped back through the window—I saw the flash of the curtains——"

"Who was it?"

"I don't know. I don't know. Oh, Vi——"

"You stay here," said Vi, grimly. She grabbed an iron poker from the rack of firetools at her boudoir fireplace and ran into Kerrie's bedroom. She snapped on the light.

The room was empty.

Kerrie followed to the doorway, looking in, her teeth chattering. The curtains were still moving a little.

Vi looked at the bed; Kerrie looked at it. There was a fresh slash a foot long in the silk coverlet. Vi threw back the coverlet; the sheet and mattress were slashed, too.

She went to the windows and locked them.

"Got away clean. Kerrie, haven't you any idea——"

"N-n-no. I couldn't really s-see. It was too d-dark."

"Kerrie. Hon. You're——"

There was a sharp-and-soft rap on the corridor door.

The two women looked at each other.

Then Vi moved to the door and said: "Who—is it?"

"Queen. Did—— Who screamed in there?"

"Don't let him in," whispered Kerrie. "You—I'm not dressed . . ." She felt calm suddenly.

Vi unlocked the door and opened it to a space of two inches. She looked at Beau coldly. He was in pajamas and his hair was a tumbled log-jam.

"What's wrong?" he demanded in an undertone. "Where's Kerrie? It was Kerrie who screamed, wasn't it?"

"Somebody climbed in from the terrace just now and tried to knife her. She yelped, and whoever it was beat it."

"Knifed!" Beau was silent. Then he cried: "Kerrie!"

"What do you want?"

"Are you all right?"

"Perfectly all right."

Beau grunted with relief. "Who was it?"

"I don't know. I didn't see."

"Knifed, huh," muttered Beau. "Listen. Don't say anything about it. I'll—I'll keep my eyes open. And after this keep your doors and windows locked at night!"

"Yes," said Kerrie.

Vi shut and locked the door. With Kerrie following her closely, she shuffled on her bare soles to the boudoir door and locked that. Then she locked her own bedroom door.

"I guess we're safe now, hon."

"Vi," whispered Kerrie. "Are you—scared?"

"Not . . . much."

"Would you mind if I spent the rest of the night with you?"

"Oh, Kerrie!"

Kerrie fell asleep in Vi's bed, clutching Vi's big warm body desperately. Vi lay awake for a long time, staring into the darkness.

Beau did not sleep at all. He returned to his room, dressed, and began a noiseless tour of inspection. He found the place where the intruder had climbed into Kerrie's room—from the terrace directly under her windows. He climbed the vine like a cat, examining each foot of it in the light of an electric torch. But except for several bruises and, in one place, a snapped piece of trellis-work, there were no clews.

He sought out the night watchman. But the watchman had seen and heard nothing.

In the house again, he stole into Edmund De Carlos' bedroom. In the heavy half-light the man's beard jutted toward the ceiling, his mouth open and his teeth palely visible as he snored. There was a smell of alcohol about his bed. He was sprawled on it fully clothed.

Beau listened to his snores, eyes on the motionless figure. The snores were regular, too regular. And there was a tension about the supine man which was not like the relaxation of sleep.

De Carlos was shamming.

Beau almost yanked him out of bed by the throat. But then he turned and quietly left the man's room. He spent the rest of the night patrolling the corridor outside Kerrie's suite.

DE CARLOS absented himself during the next three days. He was reported to be bucking an intimate little poker syndicate somewhere in town.

The morning he returned, livid under his beard and cursing his losses, Beau was not there; and Kerrie felt an overwhelming desire to get away from the house.

She dressed in a riding habit and went down to the stables with Violet. A groom saddled two horses—Panjandrum, Kerrie's white Arabian mare, to which she was passionately attached, and Gargantua, the big roan stallion Vi rode.

They trotted into the cool of the woods side by side. The nightmare of three nights before seemed far away, as if it had happened in a world of dark dreams. The sun's rays seeped through the trees like sparkling water, splashing the bridle path with drops of light.

Kerrie inhaled deeply. "This is the first time in ages I've felt really alive. Trees have an odor, Vi, did you know that? I never realized it before."

"So have horses," said Vi, wrinkling her nose. "Geeup, you plug!"

"You're so romantic! I'm going to run for it."

"Kerrie! Be careful!"

But Kerrie was gone, the little white mare skimming down the path, her fine neck extended, her slender legs contemptuous of the speckled earth. They vanished round a turn.

Vi kicked Gargantua's vast sides but, turning his massive head in mild inquiry, he continued his lumbering trot. "Come on, you! Shift into high!"

Gargantua stopped altogether, his big ears twitching.

Somewhere ahead there had been a cry, a crash.

"Kerrie!" shrieked Vi. She began to belabor the stallion's ribs so violently that he bounded forward.

She thundered round the turn and there, a hundred yards ahead, made out two figures, one moving, the other still. The white mare's body sprawled on the bridle path; she was thrashing about, kicking with three legs. The fourth, her right foreleg, was crumpled under her like a snapped twig.

Kerrie lay beside the path in a heap.

Gargantua drummed up and began to nose Panjandrum as Vi scrambled off his back and flung herself on Kerrie.

"Kerrie! Open your eyes! Oh, Kerrie, please——"

Kerrie moaned. She sat up, dazed.

"Are you all right, Kerrie? You don't feel—as if—anything's bro . . ."

"I'm all right," said Kerrie in a sick voice. "I think I am, anyway."

"What happened, Kerrie? Tell me!"

"Panjandrum threw me. It wasn't her fault. She was galloping, and stumbled suddenly. I flew right over her head. Vi, it was a miracle. I mean, ordinarily, I'd have broken my neck. But I happened to land in this heap of leaves, and they softened my fall. How is she? . . . Vi!"

She saw the mare, writhing in pain on the path.

"Vi! She's broken her leg!"

Kerrie ran over to the mare, sank on her knees, stroked the rigid neck, forced herself to look at the snapped foreleg. The steel shoe dangled from the motionless hoof.

"Vi," said Kerrie in a horrified voice. "Look—at—this."

"What's the matter?"

"The shoe on her broken leg. It's . . . But it can't be. I watched Jeff Crombie in the smithy only this morning. He shod her fresh—all four—a few hours ago!"

"I don't get you," said Vi slowly.

On hands and knees Kerrie began a feverish examination of the path, pushing leaves aside, flipping twigs away.

"Four of the nails are missing!"

"You mean someone——"

"Here!" Kerrie sat cross-legged on the path, fiercely examining two horseshoe nails. They were bent and scratched.

"Somebody," said Kerrie grimly, "loosened these nails and pried them partly out of Panjandrum's hoof with a pair of pliers." And she sat very still, staring at the nails.

"You mean some one loosened the shoe," said Vo, aghast, "so that it would flop free in a gallop and make Panjandrum stumble?"

"Except for the miracle of those leaves, Vi, I'd be lying over there with a broken neck this minute, and it would have been put down as an—accident."

Kerrie smoothed the corded, silken neck with her palm. The mare lay more quietly now, her big eyes on Kerrie's face.

Then Kerrie said in a hard voice: "Ride back to the stables and tell them to come for Panjandrum, Vi. I'll stay here with her."

"But, Kerrie, you can't! Suppose some one—— I won't leave you alone here!"

"Please, Vi. And don't say anything about the nails."

There was something so coldly final in Kerrie's tone that Vi gulped and mounted Gargantua and lumbered off.

To Be Continued.

High Officials Plan Solemn Borah Tribute

President and Cabinet To Attend Senate Rites at Noon Today

The "great isolationist," who often dared to stand alone, will not be alone in his last hours under the Capitol dome.

The state funeral for Senator William Edgar Borah today will bring the presence and the tribute of a throng of officials, led by President Roosevelt.

In the hushed Senate chamber which often rang with his oratory during his 33 years' service, the body of the Idaho statesman will lie throughout most of the day.

At noon the Senate, sorrowing for its dean, will meet for the brief and simple service. The President and his Cabinet, members of the Supreme Court, high officials of the Army and Navy, diplomats and other dignitaries will attend.

Admission by Card

Befitting the funeral of a statesman who came from the plain people and who never lost his own simplicity, galleries will be open to persons with ordinary cards of admission—such as they might use on any other day. No special cards will be issued.

After the casket is placed in the Senate chamber about 9:30 a. m., doors to the galleries will open at 11, and people will be seated there in the order in which they come. The casket will not be open while it is in the Senate chamber.

The Rev. Ze Barney T. Phillips, chaplain of the Senate and a long-time friend of Borah, will read the service. The Rev. James Shera Montgomery, chaplain of the House, will say the benediction.

The casket will remain in the Senate chamber until 5 p. m., with Capitol policemen forming a guard of honor.

Door May Be Open

During the afternoon it is likely that a door in the gallery will be open for persons who wish to step inside to pay final respects to the statesmen. But Senate officials said that point would be decided definitely this morning.

With a motorcycle escort from the Metropolitan Police, the casket will be carried to Union Station to begin the long journey to Idaho about 6 p. m.

Mrs. Borah, close friends of the family and a Congressional committee will accompany the body to Boise, where burial will be Thursday.

The ten Senators named to the committee are Clark of Idaho, Austin of Vermont, Nye of North Dakota, Vandenberg of Michigan, Lodge of Massachusetts, White of Maine, Pittman of Nevada, O'Mahoney of Wyoming, Burke of Nebraska and Minton of Indiana. The ten Representatives to be appointed will be announced this morning.

The 74-year-old Idaho Senator died Friday night at his home here after suffering a cerebral hemorrhage Tuesday morning.

After arrival in Boise at 7 a. m. Thursday, the body will lie in the rotunda of the State capitol until the funeral which will be held there at 2:30 that afternoon.

Mr. Kelly died while visiting a neighbor Saturday. He was born in Baltimore and lived for many years at Alexandria.

Mr. Kelly had been with the Southern Railway since he was a boy. He retired as an engineer about six years ago. He was a member of the Brotherhood of Railway Trainmen. Besides his sister, Mrs. Ethel Howard, with whom he lived, he is survived by another sister, Mrs. Daisy Manuel, of Beltsville.

Gen. Bundy Dies; Led First Division in '17

Long Illness Fatal To Retired Veteran; Funeral on Wednesday

Maj. Gen. Omar Bundy, 78, United States Army (retired), whose fighting career ranged from Sioux Indian campaigns in frontier days to major battles in the World War, when he led the first American division to cross the Atlantic, died yesterday at his home, 3700 Morrison street northwest after a two-year illness.

Shortly after the United States declared war in 1917, Gen. Bundy sailed for France as commander of the First Division, A. E. F., and served with it until September of that year when he was named to command of the Second Division. He participated in the occupation of the Toulon, Rupt and Troyon Sectors, the Aisne Operations and later commanded the Sixth and Seventh Army Corps.

For his services overseas he was named a commander of the French Legion of Honor and was awarded the French Croix de Guerre with Palm with the citation that "he came to France as commander of the Second Division and made his unit a division of the first rank; by his stubborn defense and his obstinate counter attacks he contributed brilliantly in stopping the German offensive before Chateau Thierry."

A native of Newcastle, Ind., Gen. Bundy was graduated from West Point in 1883. After a year's service in Idaho and Montana, he attended the Infantry-Cavalry School, Fort Leavenworth, Kans., and upon graduation returned to his post at Fort Missoula, Mont., to serve with his regiment in the field against the Crow Indians. Later he served with his regiment in the Sioux Campaign in South Dakota.

As a captain he participated in the Siege of Santiago during the Spanish-American War and in 1899 sailed for the Philippines for service against the insurrectionists.

From 1902 until 1905, Gen. Bundy was assistant instructor in law at the General Service and Staff College, Fort Leavenworth, and returned to the Philippines in 1905 to participate in operations against the Moros.

Gen. Bundy graduated from the Army War College here in 1913 and then served with infantry troops on the Texas border until 1917.

He was awarded the Silver Star with Oak Leaf Cluster for services in Cuba and the Philippines.

His wife, Mrs. Addie Harden Bundy, of 3700 Morrison street northwest, and his brother, James Bundy, of Seattle, Wash., survive.

Funeral services will be held Wednesday at 2 p. m. in Fort Myer Chapel. Burial with military honors will be in Arlington Cemetery.

MANHATTANERS INTO CAPRICE. Eddie Mayhoff's Trio, direct from New York, and Dancers Isabelle Rutledge and Andy Mulhall will open at the Cafe Caprice next Thursday, January 25. This elegant entertainment set-up will automatically take rank among the town's topflight units. Eddie Mayhoff's group will both do vocals and play for dancing. Miss Rutledge and Andy Mulhall, who are now featured at Manhattan's smart Essex House, will stage some diverting dance contests besides offering their own artful stepping. Andy will also "emcee" the Caprice festivities. Nice going!

GIFTS FOR GIRLS. Maria Karson, captainette of Mayfair's Karson Trio, is joyful over a huge Mexican sombrero presented by an admirer who's convinced that her rendition of "Rancho Grande" is the best ever . . . That gemmed identification bracelet worn by dainty Singer Adele Van, of the Lounge Riviera, is a present from Patricia Prochnik, who's been named Washington's No. 1 debutante of 1940.

"HAPPY BIRTHDAY, MR. PRESIDENT," song just written by Anchor Room's Matt Windsor in honor of the President's Birthday Ball, is being given a big whirl all around town. Commissioner George Allen has ordered 300 copies of it to be sent over the country for use on the eve of the big party. . . . Another group of star night spot artists will appear on WOL's second broadcast boosting the Birthday Ball on next Thursday evening between 9:15 and 9:30. They'll include Bert Granoff, of the Neptune Room; Adelita Varela, of the Madrillon, and Maria Karson's Trio from the Mayfair.

OFF THE SICK LIST is Manager Oscar, of the Hi Hat, who's back and buzzing around the H. H. with his accustomed vim . . . Lynne Allison, of the King Cole Room, has also beaten off a horrid cold and is warbling prettily as ever. June Bartlett subbed for her very cleverly.

LOTUS BLOSSOMS HUGELY. This is Twelfth Anniversary Week at Lotus and it's going to be one of the biggest of the year . . . The Earle Lindsay Revue, packed with dancing lovelies and adroit specialty artists, opens today . . . Dozens of parties are already booked for the week . . . Buddy Shaner, the "Irish lad with the champagne voice," who's been on his way back for a week, will positively return tomorrow or Wednesday . . . You can expect almost any kind of circusing around from Bill Strickland's band this week. They've been holding secret rehearsals.

MADRILLON BIRTH RATE. Three members of Carr and Don's orchestra at the Madrillon expect to be proud papas in the next 30 days or so . . . They're Don himself, Drummer Leon Farber and Trumpeter Johnny Roub. There should be loads of free cigars around the Madrillon in February . . . While we're on the subject of vital statistics, we must tell you that George MacDonald, of Eddy Brandt's Metronome Room Orchestra, is the brand-new doting father of a baby son.

IMPRESARIO MAX LOWE of the Shoreham is being complimented on his coup in being first to introduce badminton on a Washington night spot floor . . . But it isn't the first time that Max has been out ahead in spotting the possibilities in presenting a sports spectacle as part of a floor show.

Manno and Strafford, star dancers of Lotus' twelfth anniversary week revue

A few years ago, he was first to introduce table tennis champions to Washington as night spot stars.

MAESTROS DIFFER. Dick Koons' orchestra in the Mayflower Lounge is enthusiastically playing all the tunes from "Three After Three," the musical that recently adorned the National Theater . . . Band Leader Milton Davis, of the Rainbow Room, has all the "Three After Three" numbers, too, but he just looks at them with a bored expression.

PARISIAN CONGA. Singer Jean Cathon, of La Salle Versailles, can dance the la conga like 50,000,000 Frenchmen. This accomplishment is naturally much appreciated by the debutantes of this season and last. So the lassies are cooking up a Sunday night party (Versailles is closed on Sundays) so that Jean can spend a whole evening teaching them how to do the conga with that Parisian flourish.

FREDDIE, TAKE A BOW. Much of the excellent background of Bill McCune's Shar-Zad orchestra is due to string bassiest Freddie Harnach. His work is so smooth that it's perhaps taken too much for granted. Freddie formerly played with Georges Barnere's orchestra in New York and with the symphony orchestra of Portland, Oreg.

WATCH YOUR GLASS when Dena Lorena, Troika's "Bulitchki" girl sails out on the floor. For she's likely to take it. Not to drink the contents, but to sing about them. Then she'll call on you to stand and down the drink "bottoms up" amid applause.

THE "DANCE COCKTAILS" will arrive in Bamboo Gardens today. Stars of this bright group are the Michel Twins and Margie May. Also in the show will be Dancers Bonguard and Dooley, plus other diversionists.

UPSTAIRS AND DOWN is the route for Max Zinder's orchestra in Del Rio's Fiesta Room. Early in the week they play on the terrace adjoining the dance floor. But when those Friday and Saturday crowds come boiling in, the lads emigrate to the overhead balcony.

PALL MALL RODEO. Most hilarious place in town around midnight is the Pall Mall Room when fearless patrons ride hobby horses on the dance floor. These wooden nags are real broncs, though they may not look it. Hold tight!

CHILE CHEF. Dick Ashby, owner of Dick's Grill, personally concocts that incomparable chile con carne that's warming up so many folks these cold days. The chef just hasn't Mr. Ashby's way with chile.

CRACKLING OPE FIRES make both the Nightingale and River Bend the coziest countryside spots for miles around in this wintry weather. The blazing logs of the River Bend fireplace make a cheery picture as you open the door. The Nightingale fireplace is so big that it will accommodate a middle-sized tree.
